Second diplomacy tour set

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will begin a second round of shuttle diplomacy in the Middle East Monday, this time seeking a formula to separate Israeli and Syrian forces on the Golan Heights.

President Nixon made the announcement Tuesday of Kissinger's new mission, in the White House Rose Garden, flanked by the foreign ministers of Egypt and Saudi Arabia. The purpose of the mission, Nixon said, is "to get the process started."

Nixon conferred with Ismail Fahmy of Egypt and Omar Sakkaf of Saudi Arabia for 90 minutes. Their meeting, with Kissinger participating, marked the end of a three-day visit of the two Arab ministers to Washington.

Fahmy and Sakkaf brought a message from the heads of state of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Algeria, who met in Algiers Feb. 14. Neither the Arab ministers nor American officials disclosed the message was. Both Fahmy and Sakkaf repeatedly termed it as "good news."

There was no doubt, however, that the message meant an Arab proposal worked out in the Algiers mini-summit, and aimed at ending the deadlock between Syria and Israel.

The meeting here focused on the Syrian

Israeli disengagement issue, but the question of lifting the oil embargo also came up.

When asked if the disengagement talks and the lifting of the embargo, are connected, Kissinger replied:

"Not necessarily the way you think they are connected."

"Once we see that intentions are good, it (the embargo) might be lifted. . . Who knows, it might be lifted in one or two months," Sakkaf said.

But then, pressed repeatedly on this point and asked whether the Syrians hold the key to the embargo, the Saudi minister said:

"In a way, yes."

Neither Nixon nor the two Arab ministers mentioned the oil question when they made brief remarks in the Rose Garden, but Sakkaf said: "We believe something will happen soon for the benefit of the United States and the world." Nixon stressed that he is seeking a permanent settlement in the Middle East, but added that the immediate problem is disengagement of Syrian and Israeli forces.

Though both Fahmy and Sakkaf lavished praise on the United States in general, and Nixon and Kissinger in particular, Sakkaf in effect said that the oil embargo against this country was justified.

"It was the United States, and not France or Britain which sent arms and is now giving $2.2 billion to Israel," he said.

"We want the United States to help the Middle East; we want some of the $2.2 billion which is going to the other side diverted to Arabs who need it more, who live in tents," Sakkaf added, referring to the Palestinian refugees.

"Be fair, help those who suffer; look at the cause from the right angle; be neutral," he asked.

Meanwhile, Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, angered by criticism of his leadership during the October Middle East war, announced in Jerusalem Tuesday that he will refuse to serve in the Israeli government now being formed.

He made his statement to a meeting of his close associates in Premier Golda Meir's Labor party.

"The passage of time and the development of new events have persuaded the committee that further hearings at this time are not necessary for the committee to successfully complete its work," Ervin said.

Ervin said the only dissenter to the decision was Sen. Edward J. Gurney, R-Fla., who wanted the investigation totally shut down and the report written immediately.

Meanwhile, in New York, former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and ex-Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans went on trial Tuesday despite their renewed protest.

They are accused of exerting corrupt influence in exchange for a secret $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Mitchell, 60, and Stans, 65, are charged with accepting the under-the-table cash donation from fugitive financier Robert Vesco with the understanding they would try to sidetrack a Securities and Exchange Commission probe of his financial empire.

In pretrial motions the defense had argued before Judge Lee P. Gagliardi that a fair trial was impossible in New York. They cited the widespread publicity engendered not only by the Vesco case but also by the Watergate scandal in Washington, where both Mitchell and Stans have been interrogated.

Oil price rollback OK'd by Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today passed and sent to the House emergency energy legislation providing for an oil price rollback.

Sens. Philip Hart and Robert Griffin, of Michigan, voted for Senate passage in the 67-32 vote.

Passage came despite a warning from federal energy chief William E. Simon that President Nixon intended to veto the bill if it remained in its present form.

Simon also announced Tuesday that additional gasoline will be sent to some states to relieve long lines at the pumps.

The final vote on the bill came after the Senate rejected a motion by Sen. Paul J. Fannin, R-Ariz., to send the bill back to conference with the House to resolve the controversy surrounding the rollback provision.

The bill would give the administration the authority to order gasoline rationing and other mandatory fuel-saving measures.

Senate Interior Committee Chairman Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., claimed the rollback could cut the retail price of gasoline by 5 cents a gallon. The bill would rollback the price of approximately one quarter of the crude oil produced in the United States.

Jackson maintained afterwards that the victory of Richard Vander Veen in Monday's election to fill the house seat vacated by Vice President Ford was a factor in the bill's relatively easy passage.

Jackson said that the vote in Michigan was "a clear voice of disapproval of what's going on in Washington. People are getting fed up."

Opponents say the rollback would destroy the oil companies' incentives to expand production.

The emergency bill, which was first introduced by Jackson in October, has failed in two previous attempts to gain Senate passage.

An administration-backed filibuster prevented the bill from coming to a vote before Christmas. Last month the Senate voted to send the measure back to conference to remove a controversial provision designed to limit oil company profits.

The conferees in turn substituted the equally controversial price rollback for the excess profits provision.

The rollback would set the price of all domestically produced crude oil at $5.25 per barrel, and establish a ceiling of $7.09 per barrel, beyond which the price of oil would not be allowed to rise.

Roughly three-fourths of the oil produced in this country is under price controls and already is selling at $5.25 per barrel. The remaining one-quarter has been exempted from price controls in an effort to stimulate greater production and currently is selling at an average price of $9.51 per barrel.

In addition to the rollback, the bill would suspend, temporarily, clean air guidelines to permit power plants to burn coal in place of scarce stocks of low-sulfur oil and natural gas. The legislation also would grant auto makers a one-year delay in meeting car exhaust standards.

Meanwhile, the Federal Energy Office Tuesday ordered an emergency injection of some 1.6 million barrels of gasoline into 18 shortage-stricken states.

Eight states were assigned an additional 5 per cent of their original allocations of gasoline for the one remaining week in February.

Watergate specter haunted election

By R.D. CAMPBELL
State News Staff Writer

"Republicanism is in the drinking water" in Grand Rapids like a New York Times writer said last week, voters in Michigan's 5th Congressional District must let their thirst go unquenched in next weeks.

Richard Vander Veen, a 51-year-old corporate attorney, became the first Democrat sent to Washington by Grand Rapids voters since 1910 when he received 60 per cent of a light voter turnout Tuesday, and won election to the House once held by Gerald Ford.

Robert VanderLaan, Republican state party majority leader until he tendered the post to devote more time to the campaign was the heavy favorite only a few days before the election in the momentum shifted.

VanderLaan last Friday had given three Grand Rapids reporters folded pieces of paper with his election outcome prediction at the Grand Rapids Press club. Gary DeJonge of the Grand Rapids Press and Bob Burton of WOOD radio station said Tuesday that they were told to put the predictions in their pockets and not check them until the polls closed Monday night.

"It said simply: 'VanderVeen 52 per cent, VanderLaan 48 per cent,'" Burton said.

"The thing was burning a hole in my pocket over the weekend," DeJonge said.

VanderLaan apparently recognized that Vander Veen, who called the election "a mandate against Watergate and Nixon," had successfully appealed on national issues to the majority of 5th District voters.

Republicans across the nation are doing a double-take because of Monday's election. GOP National Chairman George Bush said the results would be analyzed precinct by precinct.

"We felt confident we could hold this seat in spite of national problems. Only in-depth analysis will tell us what went wrong," Bush told the Associated Press Tuesday.

However, Michigan GOP chairman William McLaughlin said: "Watergate killed us."

He blamed the outcome on the independent voters who "came out and gutted us."

"They are unhappy with Washington," he said. "I think they were happy with all but one thing — Watergate."

In fact, VanderLaan had himself indicated that he did not want President Nixon to make a personal appearance in the district.

McLaughlin said it is too early to tell if Nixon should resign. "Something has to give. There's trouble in the vineyard," he said.

It might be that 25-year 5th District champion Gerald Ford had as much to do with Vander Veen's election as anything else.

In the final days before the election Vander Veen pushed not only the idea that Nixon should resign as he had said throughout the campaign, but also promised that putting Ford in the White House would restore dignity and respect to the executive office.

"This election did represent a referendum on Richard Nixon," Vander Veen told the State News Tuesday.

"Mr. (Barry) Goldwater may wish to increase his 10 per cent prediction" concerning GOP congressmen who could find their jobs in jeopardy in the fall elections, Vander Veen said.

"All the things we've been working on throughout the campaign became visible in the last week," he added.

"It was an amazing thing. You couldn't have believed the momentum," a Vander Veen campaign worker said moments after she returned from the victory party.

"The democrats really got it together," she added.

State Republicans at the Capitol Tuesday were talking about the election, asking themselves how it might affect their political careers in the fall elections.

Not only were state and national politicians scrutinizing the election, the Soviet news agency Tass said that voter dissatisfaction in matters including the energy crisis, inflation and unemployment caused the Republican's loss. It did not mention Watergate, however.

At this point it is not clear if the vote represents a mandate against Nixon or a mandate for Ford and a man who will do everything he can to put Ford in the White House.

However, another Congressional election test in Michigan is forthcoming in which Ford sentiment will not be a major factor. The seat of Republican Congressman James Harvey from Saginaw, who was appointed to a federal judgeship, will be up for grabs this spring.

Winner's son happy; shares father's ideals

By R.D. CAMPBELL

Larry Vander Veen, 725 Beulah St. Lansing, junior, was not sure his father, Richard, would score a major upset in winning Vice President Gerald Ford's vacated 5th Congressional District seat.

"I never wanted to say to myself that we were gonna win this one," said Vander Veen, the son of the subject of today's New York Times daily personality sketch.

Young Vander Veen, 20, is the second son of the newly elected Democratic congressman to attend MSU.

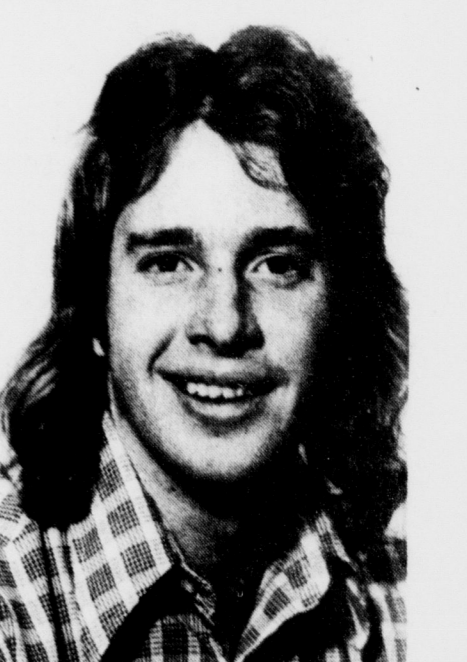

Richard Vander Veen III graduated from MSU last June. He was active in campus politics and the co-organizer of a peace march to the state Capitol during the spring.

Larry began researching past 5th District campaigns shortly after his father announced in December that he would run.

He kept active, even after winter term started, digging up from a state file more than 12,000 names of senior citizens that were used for a mailing. Several MSU friends helped him with the project, and seven MSU students spent election night at the Vander Veen home.

He agrees largely with his father's personal sentiments that led to a campaign based on Watergate and the "bankruptcy" of the Nixon administration.

"My feelings largely reflect my father's," he said. "Mr. Nixon was never respected around our house."

VANDER VEEN: "Nixon was never respected around our house." Larry said the ideological victory as a mandate vote from a traditionally Republican district was more important than the personal victory of his father. "The ideological part turns me on a lot more than the personal angle," he said. "He's not just my father. He's someone I agree with and respect." Larry, a psychology major, said he does not want to enter politics himself.

Court strikes college voting law

The Supreme Court has declined to reinstate a Texas law preventing college students from voting in their school district if they do not intend to establish permanent residence.

Students at several Texas colleges had challenged the law which was consequently struck down as a violation of the equal protection guarantee of the 14th Amendment.

The court agreed Tuesday to hear a challenge of a Georgia law forbidding the media from identifying female victims of rape of attempted rape.

In other action, the court:
 • Ruled that an employe has the right to petition for judicial review in addition to his right of arbitration under union grievance procedures. The complaint was one of racial discrimination.

• Agreed to rule on a Louisiana law that allows women to serve as jurors only if they specifically ask to be jurors.

• Refused to hear the appeal of Chicago prosecutors and police who want immunity from law suits stemming from their actions in a 1969 raid on Black Panther party members.

• Agreed to review a ruling that a play can be held obscene because of conduct, such as simulated sex acts.

Seven indicted for loan fraud

Seven men were indicted in Chicago Tuesday for allegedly defrauding Teamsters union pension funds of more than $1.4 million.

The men obtained loans from regional pension funds for a manufacturing project in New Mexico, a U.S. attorney said.

Government lawyers said the men used the funds for their own use, made loans to their friends and concealed the fraud from the pension fund by filing false financial statements.

Named in the indictment were Irwin Weiner of Niles, Ill.; Ronald DeAngelos of Port Richey, Fla.; Allen Dorfman of Deerfield, Ill.; Jack Sheetz of Dallas; Albert Matheson of Detroit; Anthony Spilotro of Las Vegas and Joseph Lombardo of Chicago.

35 Greek Communists arrested

Thirty-five top members of the outlawed Greek Communist party and members of its youth branch have been arrested and charged with plotting to impose a Communist dictatorship in Greece, the government announced in Athens Tuesday.

The government also accused former Greek politician Andrea Papandreou of cooperation with the Communists. Papandreou left Greece after a 1967 army coup led to the presidency of George Papadopoulos.

The Communists are accused of planning riots similar to those on Greek college campuses last November that led to the fall of Papadopoulos and the beginning of a new civilian republic.

Nixon proposes state aid plan

President Nixon proposed Tuesday a plan to phase out the Economic Development Administration by providing block grants to states with economically depressed areas.

Nixon's plan, budgeted at $330 million, would also eliminate seven regional action planning commissions by letting states determine how the federal funds would be spent.

Eighty per cent of the grants would go to states on a formula based highly on unemployment rates.

Nixon said his plan "is designed to help states and communities provide smoother and more orderly adjustment to economic changes."

Farm food prices break records

The record $1.537 was spent by consumers in 1973 for a market basket of farm-produced food, the Agriculture Dept. said Tuesday.

The department said that the basket price, based on a theoretical household of 3.2 persons, will rise again in the first half of 1974.

Last year's basket was up 17.3 per cent from 1972, with higher prices to farmers accounting for 78 per cent of the increase.

Middlemen who transport, process and sell food accounted for 6.5 per cent of the increase.

Hearst hopes for sincere reply

The Washington Secretary of State will administer a $2 million food giveaway in California to show Randolph Hearst's good faith to the Symbionese Liberation Army who kidnaped his daughter early in February.

Ludlow Kramer, who organized a massive food distribution program for unemployed workers in Seattle, met with Hearst in San Francisco Tuesday to discuss implementation of the program.

Hearst told newsmen in front of his house Tuesday the money "is not ransom" and that he hopes it will sway the kidnapers to release his daughter, Patricia on Wednesday, her 20th birthday. Hearst said he hopes for a sincere response from the kidnapers.

Council vote adds 2 more committees

By MIKE GALATOLA
 State News Staff Writer

The Academic Council decided Tuesday to reduce its 12 standing committees to eight, as it slightly modified a report calling for the council to streamline.

Council members voted overwhelmingly to add two standing committees to the six proposed in the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee to Review Academic Governance. The ad hoc committee recommended, in an amendment to its own report, that a separate committee dealing with curricular matters and another committee dealing with issues exclusively or primarily matters of graduate education be added to its proposed committee on academic affairs.

The ad hoc committee had originally proposed that the Curriculum Committee and the Educational Policies Committee be combined into the single academic affairs committee. The ad hoc committee had also suggested changing the Graduate Council into an advisory - consultative committee.

These recommendations provoked strong objections from both of these standing committees' chairmen and from the Council of Graduate Students. Ad hoc committee Chairman Lester V. Manderscheid alluded to this opposition in speaking for the amendment.

"We are aware of several standing committees that have voted for their continuance," Manderscheid said. "And we present this alternative recommendation to expedite council deliberation so we can reach a conclusion on the report."

The council accepted the five other standing committees the ad hoc committee has suggested in its report. Anne C. Garrison, chairman of the Building, Lands and Planning Committee, attempted unsuccessfully to keep her committee from being merged into the proposed committee on academic environment.

The ad hoc committee had recommended that the Building, Lands and Planning Committee be merged with the committees on Public Safety and on Business Affairs into the one academic environment committee. Though all three committees had voted to disapprove of the ad hoc committee's suggestions, Garrison was the only chairman of the three who was present to propose an amendment.

Stating that her entire committee, including its six ex officio members, had disapproved of the merging, Garrison said the new committee would face an intolerable workload.

But Paul Smith, ad hoc committee member, said the new committee would be able to view an environment problem from all the perspectives of safety, business and building priorities.

The four other standing committees council approved without discussion include the academic governance committee, which would assume the duties of the present governance committee and those of the current Committee on Committees; the committees on student affairs and on faculty tenure would generally continue in their present duties.

The Faculty Affairs and Faculty Compensation Committee would become the faculty affairs committee, adding to its duties the giving of advice to the provost on general policies regarding teaching, research and administration assignments, and on policies regarding appointment, reappointment and promotion.

Senate approves ceding state land for federal use

A bill to give the U.S. government more than 8,000 acres of state land, including parts of the famous Sleeping Bear sand dunes along the Lake Michigan shoreline, was approved Tuesday by the Michigan Senate.

The measure authorizes the state Dept. of Natural Resources to cede to the federal government Benzie and Leelanau state parks to eventually become part of the controversial Sleeping Bear Dunes National Park.

Though many residents of the area question the environmental and economic impact the future national park will have on the region, only three dissenting votes were cast in the Senate.

Grebner sues officials over voting lists

By ANDREA AUSTIN
State News Staff Writer

Maybe you can't fight city hall and win, but you sure can go on swinging.

Mark Grebner, co-chairman of the 1973 Nelson Brown - Margaret McNeil city council campaign, thinks the city overcharged him for a voter registration list and will test the list in court at 9 a.m. today in East Lansing District Court.

In a suit filed in Small Claims Court in November, Grebner named City Manager John Patriarche and City Clerk Beverly Colizzi as defendants. Because of a provision in the city charter, the suit was transferred to District Court.

Grebner doesn't expect to win his case, in which he charges the city billed him $75 for a $20 voter list. He says the city has blown the situation to "absurd" proportions.

Though Grebner is still looking at it as a $55 matter, he thinks it may cost the city closer to $1,000.

"The city isn't going to make any savings," he said. "It's going to tie up the city manager and clerk in court all morning, plus the rent of the court and attorney's fees."

Philip Rosewarne, the attorney representing the city in the case, wouldn't cite a specific figure as to the city's cost, but indicated noncommittally it would probably fall somewhere between the $55 in Grebner's suit and $1,000.

Beyond the plaintiff's $5 filing charge and a $2 fee for each defendant, the price of the court's involvement is left to the judge's discretion, Frank Russell, chief court administrator, said.

Robert Bell, the judge in this case, was called in specially from Mason after former 54B District Judge Maurice Schoenberger disqualified himself from the case. Schoenberger receives part of his $32,000 salary from the city.

The city contends that Grebner was not overcharged because the city council set the price for an alphabetical listing of voters at $75 two years ago when the city began using computer printouts, Colizzi said.

Grebner contends in his suit, however, that the city violated state law that requires voter lists to be sold at cost. He maintains the list cost the city about $20.

The city never sells more than four voter lists for one election, Colizzi said. The entire cost of the lists varies from $115 to $120, she added.

Under the city charter, Rosewarne said, the city must be represented in court by an attorney, which is not permitted in Small Claims Court.

Rosewarne estimated that court proceedings will take half the day.

Motion to overturn negative vote on student liaison plan postponed

A motion to overturn a Feb. 15 vote to reject the student liaison proposal was tabled by COGS when two members left the final moments of Monday night's meeting, bringing the assembly without a quorum.

COGS' member and student representative to the Academic Council Paul Smith told the body that the proposal could pass in the Academic Council if it has COGS' support.

COGS rejected the proposal, which calls for a 14-member student-faculty-alumni advisory board to the trustees, by a 12 to 11 vote on Feb. 4. Major objections centered on the presence of alumni on the advisory board and its generally diluted influence.

Jan Brashler raised the motion for reconsideration near the end of the meeting. The 12 to 11 vote to reject, she said Tuesday, was "far from conclusive."

The issue will head the list of old business at COGS' March 4 meeting.

In other business, COGS learned that the provost's office is unwilling to accept the tax agreement reached by IRS and University officials.

An open meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in the International Center Con Room will feature Provost John Cantlon, Acting Graduate School Dean Clarence Minkel, Asst. Provost Herman King and COGS' officers and COGS' tax lawyer. Discussion will focus on tax status of graduate assistants.

COGS officers stress that no resolution of the issue has been made.

COGS has arranged for a talk by Robert Ardrey, a novelist, playwright, and screenwriter. Ardrey will speak on the "Biology of Human Behavior" at 8:15 p.m.

Thursday in the Campus Theater. Tickets are 50 cents and are available at the Union.

The council also completed its officers elections at the Monday night meeting. The two remaining posts - recording secretary and corresponding secretary - were filled by Joe Brockington, German and Russian Dept. representative, and Fred Zensen, Dept. of Forestry representative, respectively.

Bell to ask rate hike of record size soon

BIRMINGHAM (UPI) - Michigan Bell President David Eastlick Tuesday said his company will soon ask the Michigan Public Service Commission for the biggest rate hike in its history.

Eastlick said in an interview the request will be filed early this spring, but he would not put a dollar amount on the request.

The utility president said the company would like to hold telephone rates at current levels, but it can no longer be done because of three factors - the rising cost of gasoline, inflation and increasing competition in the telecommunications industry.

He said telephone customers will be the "real losers" if regulatory agencies continue to widen the doors for additional businesses in the field.

"Competition is not always in the public interest," he warned.

FACULTY VIEWPOINT
Grievance at MSU

THE MSU FACULTY ASSOCIATES believes that a just and humane grievance procedure is essential at Michigan State. Grievance procedures reveal much about institutions because they are designed to deal with failures or alleged failures of that institution. We believe that an element of power inevitably enters a confrontation between the individual and the institution, and we are, therefore, committed to collective bargaining to balance that power. Our efforts over the past year to assist our colleagues who initiated grievances demonstrates in actions have been designed to make the Grievance Procedure work; our suggestions are designed to achieve the same end.

PRESSURE IS BROUGHT ON THE AGGRIEVED to begin his formal grievance at the departmental level. The aggrieved should be alerted to inherent dangers of doing so. We believe that informal discussions should occur where the grievance originated, but our experience convinces us that beginning formal proceedings at the departmental level is a mistake. Issues not relevant to the grievance quickly dominate. Normally, a panel of departmental members is chosen to hear the grievance of one department member against the chairman. The panel members are thus subordinate to a party to the grievance: the chairman. He has the responsibility for decisions relating to the panel members' salaries, working conditions, promotions or tenure, and research support. The merits of the case can be obscured by considerations extraneous to the grievance. The panel is forced to vote, not on the merits of the case, but whether they have confidence in their chairman. A vote against the chairman involves risks for the panel, for if the chairman is found to have discriminated against one faculty member, there is little to prevent him from discriminating against others.

THE IMBALANCE OF POWER is seen more clearly in the disposition of the panel's decision. The departmental panel makes its report to the chairman of the department. The chairman may accept or reject the panel's finding. Thus the chairman, a party to the grievance, is given veto power over the panel's decision. He may accept or reject the decision with explanation. No questions are asked of him. He need justify his decision to no one - save his conscience. If he has discriminated against a faculty member, he has undoubtedly solved the problem of his conscience.

THE AGGRIEVED must initiate a formal request for appeal, however. And all he may appeal, the FGO has ruled, is the chairman's "administrative decision", i.e. the chairman's subjective response to the panel's decision. He may not appeal the "utterances and conclusions" of the panel. There is, then, no substantive appeal for the aggrieved, yet the chairman is allowed to decide on substantive, procedural, or whimsical grounds, whether the panel's decision is acceptable. Clearly equal protection to the parties in the grievance has disappeared.

THE MSU FACULTY ASSOCIATES is vitally interested in the development of a just and humane grievance procedure. Such a procedure must be free even of the suspicion that it functions to discourage grievances and protect the institution. That is unhealthy for the institution and destructive of the University Community in which we all work.

COMMENTARY

Hearst kidnaping cold, inhuman crime

By TOM WICKER
New York Times

NEW YORK — The kidnaping of Patricia Hearst is a particularly vile act in that its perpetrators profess to be acting in the name and on behalf of the poor and oppressed peoples of the world. There is not, however, a revolt or a rebellion against specific conditions; it is not a strike against exploitative employers; it is not a mass movement of protest against economic or social policies or political action for changed conditions.

It is, instead, a cold and inhuman crime, carried out against an abstractly chosen victim, and offering no plausible hope of altering any of the world's numerous injustices and inequities.

If these kidnapers were demanding ransom money for Hearst's safe release, their crime would be chilling enough, but not particularly startling. If they were representatives of any of the stated causes for which terror tactics have been adopted in recent years, the kidnaping might at least have some coherence or believable purpose. But the so-called Symbionese Liberation Army does not seem to represent anything but itself and has set forth purposes so grandiose as to make them seem more ludicrous than political.

That fact, with some other aspects of the case, suggests that the kidnapers, so far from being skilled "commandos", are bumbling amateurs out to make a big name for themselves. Even their carrying out of the kidnaping itself was hardly professional. For example, in stealing a car for the purpose of carrying Hearst away, they also briefly kidnaped its owner, vastly increasing their risks of detection before their main purpose could be achieved.

For another example, in their first spectacular crime, the murder of Oakland's school superintendent, Marcus A. Foster, the S.L.A. allowed two of its members to be caught two months later in possession of the gun with which he was killed. The clumsiest hoodlum should have enough intelligence to have got rid of the weapon immediately.

Those who have closely analyzed some of the S.L.A. statements and the tape-recorded pronouncements of "Field

Those who have closely analyzed some of the Symbionese Liberation Army's statements and tape-recorded pronouncements have noticed that it might more nearly be the rhetoric of people playing at being revolutionaries than of a real radical action group.

— Tom Wicker

Marshal Cin" have noticed that this rhetoric is maudering, repetitive, full of nonsequiturs and bombast, and shows little trace of disciplined political thinking or close knowledge of social and economic conditions. That is to say, it might more nearly be the rhetoric of people playing at being revolutionaries than of a real radical action group.

The S.L.A. also demonstrated its incompetence by its demand that Randolph A. Hearst put up $70 million worth of free food for each of about 4.7 million people — welfare recipients and other for the benefit of poor people, he would have found it all but impossible not to comply, and the S.L.A. might have established some credibility for its revolutionary talk and for whatever its ultimate ransom demand will be.

Therefore, it is reasonable to suppose that the Symbionese Liberation Army — far from being a threat to the existing order — is mostly a threat to Patricia Hearst. The S.L.A. seems to have no real revolutionary or political base, puts forward only the most generalized rhetoric as its cause, and probably has its highest aim its own establishment — through spectacular acts of terror — as some sort of leading force among radical groups.

If that is so, it is notable that there has been no support of any consequence among any radical groups for the kidnaping of Hearst. The activist organizations the kidnapers designated to oversee the food distribution reacted with a statement that they could not condone terrorism by the S.L.A. any more than terrorism by "the establishment". Some said they would not participate in such a scheme, others said they would do so only if the Hearst family asked them to do so as means of saving Patricia Hearst's life.

Those who might be tempted to see political value in the S.L.A.'s crime, or any such deed, ought to weigh it against the solitary example of Alexander Solzhenitsyn. This great man, whose moral power a mighty nation cannot stand, has not merely opposed totalitarian lawless practices in his own country.

What Solzhenitsyn stands for is humanity, life, the innate worth of human being. What he opposes is a form of impersonal power that crushes individual, physically or spiritually, whatever cause.

If the world could learn what he teaches, the only true revolution would be at hand.

Firmer ethics legislation needed to better regulate closed meetings

The shallowness of the commitment of state legislators to set a high standard for political ethics is evident in the languishing of proposed legislation in Senate and House committees.

Recommendations of the Special Senate Committee on Political Ethics have been tied up in the Senate Committee on State Affairs since October 1973. A proposed open meeting law introduced by State Rep. Perry Bullard, D - Ann Arbor, has suffered at the hands of the House Judiciary Committee since its inception last June.

It is clear that state lawmakers are dragging their feet on ethics legislation and many are trying to avoid the hassle by making light of some measures. Such antics can only help to confirm public cynicism of politics which has already been heightened by the Watergate scandal.

Though some legislators have sought to discredit proposals calling for strict regulation of public meetings, lobbying disclosure, conflicts of interest and campaign finances, the need for swift affirmative action in the face of public distrust is only too evident.

A recent survey of state administrative boards and commissions by the Detroit Free Press concluded that secrecy in government is routine in Michigan. A Lansing State Journal survey of local government meetings called the MSU Board of Trustees the "most secretive" because of its practice of closing all pre-board meetings to the public. Last week the State News disclosed that the trustees were acting in violation of their own "open meeting" guidelines in discussing proposed actions behind closed doors.

If anything, proposed legislation dealing with public meetings fails to go far enough to close gaps in existing state statutes.

Some states, notably Florida, Oregon, California and Texas, have adopted stringent codes which leave no room for misinterpretation. The 1973 Texas open meeting law, for example, precludes "any pre-meeting gathering of members of a government body to predetermine their vote or action on public business." It goes even further to stipulate that all meetings with a quorum of members present where public business is discussed are to be open, including legislative investigating and conference committees. Penalties for seeking to circumvent these requirements include fines of up to $500 and six months in jail.

The difficulty in addressing the legitimate needs of conducting public business is surpassed only by the guile used by some politicians and administrators in skirting public controversy. Proposed open meeting legislation aimed at all levels of government must provide for adequate advance public notice of meetings, the voidability of actions taken at illegally closed or secret meetings, closed meetings only after a public recorded vote to discuss certain subjects strictly defined by statute and citizen standing to sue for enforcement of these provisions.

The particular strengths of the proposed Senate legislation include specific stipulations for closed meetings for collective bargaining of discussion of law suits, certain personnel matters and property disposition. Closed meetings for such purposes may only be held on an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the members of the body.

However, the likelihood for successful passage of an open meeting law may rest more with the House in the face of Senate procrastination. The House Judiciary Committee is expected to report some kind of bill, though legislator sentiment threatens to water down Bullard's proposal, which is also backed by Common Cause, a government watchdog agency.

While Bullard's bill, HB 4938, is not as complete as the Senate version, it does plug a few loopholes, such as exceptions for political party caucuses, and calls for public access to meetings of two or more members of policy-making bodies where public business is discussed.

Michigan legislators would best serve the public good by tapping on the experience of Texas lawmakers and combining the best points of proposed Senate and House bills. They should then act with quick dispatch to rid the state of what Common Cause has called "ineffective" meetings statutes and open the public decision-making process to full-fledged public scrutiny.

In the meantime, such notorious violators of the right of public access like the board of trustees would do well to reconsider their abuse of the public trust in anticipation of affirmative legislative action.

Kidnapers' cause worthy; tactics less commendable

Very few people can agree with the way the Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA) is trying to change the system, but many do agree that changing the system is necessary.

Like so many preceding movements that seek swift change, the SLA employs violence.

The demands made by the SLA are selfless and are akin to the romantic chivalry of Robin Hood. The SLA robs from the rich — the fascist-capitalist-corporate structure, as they call it — and gives to the poor — the undernourished welfare recipients of California.

Plans have already been made to distribute hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of food to the California needy. Undoubtedly the food is needed and therefore the SLA purpose is justified.

Certainly the demands of the SLA parallel closely the historic demands of the old Socialist Labor party, led by Eugene V. Debs.

While Debs' struggle was largely nonviolent, his goal of better working conditions for the common man was undeniable, except for the capitalist corporate structure that existed then. Debs proposed the 40-hour work week a generation before the capitalist corporate structure actually instituted his proposal — and then the middle-of-theroaders took credit for his ingenuity.

The demands of the SLA also compare to the demands that the founders of this country made when America was born in 1776. They used revolution and force to accomplish their goals because people were being oppressed, maligned and generally wanted political independence.

Little consideration has been given to the reasoning and precedents behind SLA demands.

The media has recently bent to the demands of the SLA, but the daily reports are merely melodramatic accounts of the heroism of the poor Hearst family.

No one has attempted to put the SLA into context with the rest of society. No one perceives the SLA as a symptom of a greater societal need. In short, the press has done a one-dimensional job of covering the SLA.

While most everyone abhors the violence of the SLA, the SLA is the only visible group that is fighting a freedom struggle for the rights of the oppressed.

The void that the splintered civil rights and student movements have left has given rise to a need for rekindled support to those oppressed by the system. The SLA, by doing this in a radical way, has alienated many people, but at least the group is accomplishing goals for the needy. The press seems to ignore all of this.

In our society there is no reason why people in California, Appalachia or MSU should go hungry or be in want of clothing and shelter. The SLA sees an obvious need for food in California. Why doesn't the press report this?

Because the problem is immediate and the democratic system fails to deal with such problems immediately, the SLA makes demands with force.

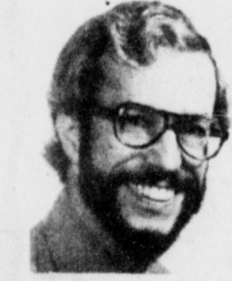

Perhaps it is time that people stood for their rights and carefully re-examined the system that makes so few welfare manipulators, and so many helpless people.

At least the SLA has pointed out the needs of some oppressed people, that the system is not working and that we toward alleviating poverty has improved but is only becoming increasingly worse.

Those who care for the struggle of victimized people can thank the SLA for pointing to these needs.

It is sad that the Symbionese action to take place in a society as wealthy as ours, but the actions of the SLA, however crude they may seem, are truly American and patriotic.

As true as the Boston Tea Party and Statue of Liberty, the Symbionese Liberation Army must stand its ground and fight in its struggle for freedom.

The Doctor's Bag

By ARNOLD WERNER, M.D.

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at MSU Health Center. Names need not be included unless a personal reply is requested.

Is it possible, physically and legally, for a woman to rape a man? A member of a group interested in your response to this question cited an article about an Amazon civilization in which rape by women was a common mating practice. Is there any truth to this tale or is it merely feminist propaganda?

Would the gentlemen involved in the case have any problem getting a conviction? Or would an erection be equated with consent?

Rape is defined as sexual contact between a man and an unwilling woman with violence or the threat of violence. According to common legal definitions a person cannot be raped by someone of the same sex, nor can a woman rape a man. Part of the problem with the legal definitions is that rape is treated as a sexual offense rather than a crime of violence.

A man would have an easier time getting a conviction — than he would getting an erection in the situation you describe. In most frightening circumstances, man's capacity to perform sexually disappears. It is only because of anatomic considerations that a woman is capable of being raped. For her, the major issue is still physical assault, not sex.

I have no information on the Amazon civilization to which you refer, but suspect that someone is confusing ritual mating activities with genuine violence.

Last year I had abdominal surgery. Being a woman, I wonder whether or not plastic surgery could successfully remove the ugly scar that was left behind?

The removal of a surgical scar of necessity involves cutting, therefore producing another surgical scar. A number of factors determine the appearance of a surgical scar. Incisions that follow natural bends and folds in the skin and run parallel to forces that normally hold skin taut, produce a less conspicuous scar.

In the abdomen, for instance, an incision going from side to side would yield a much less conspicuous result than one going up and down. Constitutional factors also play an important part and some people just tend to form inconspicuous scars and others form very heavy scars. The size of the sutures (stitches) also make a difference; the smaller the sutures and the closer together they are, the finer the result.

On facial surgery, for instance, many very tiny sutures are taken with extremely fine suture material to insure a neat result.

In abdominal surgery, however, forces on the abdominal wall and technical considerations make it necessary to use heavy materials to lace the belly together adequately and prevent rupture of seams. The type of surgery often must dictate the direction of the incision and cosmetic factors are ignored.

Surgical scars tend to become less conspicuous over a long period of time and it is not uncommon for a scar which may still have an ugly appearance after a year, to be less ugly several years later. Consultation with a plastic surgeon, who is the one who does fine medical embroidery work, should give you an opinion as to whether or not it is worthwhile to have the scar you have.

Recently, while filling out a medical history for a job application, I came to this question: "Do you have a hernia or loose rings?" What are loose rings?

The rings referred to are not found on fingers, but are the inguinal rings. They are the anatomic structures through which most hernias protrude. They are in the lower abdomen above the inguinal and in men is the place through which testes descended into the scrotal sac inside the abdomen very early in development.

Comparable structures exist in women. The term hernia generally refers to a loop of intestine protruding through an opening in the abdominal wall. Loose rings are merely a vernacular expression for somewhat widened inguinal openings without there actually being a hernia present.

Addicts forced into crime

To the Editor:

I agree with the point made in John Metcalf's letter Friday that something should be done to decrease crimes committed by drug addicts. I think he shows a basic misunderstanding of this complex situation, however, when he calls for an "open season" on pushers.

Why do drug addicts commit crimes in the first place? From all evidence, addicts steal, burglarize or mug to get money to buy drugs.

They do not do this when they are high; they do it when they are coming down and feel an overwhelming obsession with getting some more to avoid withdrawal.

Let us think about what happens when we reduce the supply of heroin by cracking down on pushers. First, the price goes up.

Now, the addict does not follow law of supply and demand. He does not say, "Gee whiz, that heroin is just too expensive this week. I guess I won't get any." The addict has to get high.

It takes more money to get high. The addict has to rob and mug more and more money to buy the same amount of heroin. Instead of alleviating the problem, we increase it.

I certainly do not want to see more pushers, but I think we should take a realistic look at the causes of drug-related crimes and the likely consequences of reducing the supply of drugs. Until we offer an alternative course to the addict until we can help them, we have no solution.

Hecklers disrupt CIA chief's talk

By JIM KEEGSTRA
State News Staff Writer

Twenty to 30 people questioned, heckled and laughed at a Central Intelligence Agency branch chief on campus Tuesday.

Philip A. True, head of the East Asia Branch of the CIA Office of Basic and Geographic Intelligence, was invited by the MSU Geography Dept. Colloquium Committee to speak on applied geographic research in the CIA.

The protesters, representing the Young Socialist Alliance and the Southern African Liberation Committee, packed the back of a small room in the Natural Science Building and spilled into the hall. Approximately 25 other people attending seemed to be nonprotesters.

Before True was introduced, Barbara Riemer, asst. professor of psychology, stated the protesters' position that the CIA has no right to speak at MSU because of its active suppression of democratic freedoms.

An older geography major who could not get into the room said: "It's unfair that these protesters should create a stir and take seats away from those who want to hear. They should make their point at the beginning and then leave."

A single page statement handed out by the protesters at the door, claimed:

●The CIA is attempting to suppress publication of the book "Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia" by Alfred McCoy, which documents CIA participation in heroin traffic.

●The CIA is in court to stop a former agent from publishing his memoirs.

●The MSU Vietnam Project from 1955 to 1961 was used as a front for the CIA, violating the Geneva convention.

The handout also claimed that the CIA "subverts the basic human rights of life and liberty and democratic self-determination," citing "well documented involvement" in Cambodia, Laos, Chile, Brazil, Guatemala, Iran and Greece. True remained calm, ignoring heckling and giggling throughout his 25-minute description of what CIA geographers and cartographers do.

When True finished, Bill Buckler, Geography Dept. graduate assistant, said: "On behalf of those here, I thank you for your talk and apologize for the disruptions."

Asked about geographical research behind the bombing of the Red River dikes in North Vietnam, True said no information on that had been requested from his department as far as he knew.

After failing to respond to several long, complex questions from protesters, True was asked if he was under orders not to answer.

"If I don't know, I can't answer," True said. "The questions seemed more like statements to me."

At the end, True thanked the group for an interesting and stimulating hour, and said he would be willing to come back to MSU anytime. Several persons shouted, "Please don't!"

Romney hits monopolies, backs Milliken for office

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Former Gov. George Romney said Monday night that the U.S. government must realign the wage-price structure or face a monopolistic economy.

Romney, speaking at a Lincoln dinner of Ingham County Republicans at the Lansing Civic Center, said the Nixon administration has done nothing to curb inflation and has encouraged the continued growth of monopolies.

"We are not going to deal with our economic problems with the house divided against itself," Romney said. "It's going to be all one thing or all another — monopolistic or capitalistic."

Romney said that American unions are monopolistic and that wages reflect power, not economic indicators.

"In collective bargaining, we are monopolistic," he said. "And this has been basic national policy. In the major industries there is an inadequate competitive structure, although there is an adequate number of enterprises."

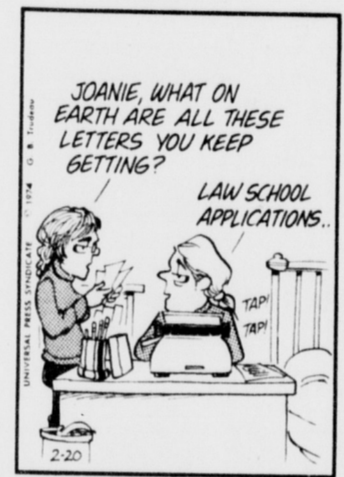

The former governor said as long as U.S. business "lacks the discipline of competition," inflation will continue.

In other comments, Romney said he strongly backs the re-election of Gov. William G. Milliken.

A BUCK OR TWO FOR LARROWE

"The history of politics shows that most major campaigns depend on large contributions from powerful men or interest groups. It is not surprising therefore, that these contributors have influenced our daily lives more than they should have.

If we as Americans want our government to respond to us, we must contribute in the very beginning. Otherwise, the voice we hear on election day, will be some other person's loudspeaker.

This is why I am making this contribution to Dr. Larrowe's campaign."

Thomas Spencer

Tom Spencer, MSU Senior, giving Prof. Larrowe a check for his campaign.

Some people say Larrowe can't make it to Congress because he doesn't have the money and the people for his campaign. What they're really saying is that Larrowe is too honest and forthright to tie himself to big money and special interests in order to get elected.

We, the STUDENTS FOR LARROWE, think that this is good. We think that a person running for office should be judged by what he stands for. We think that Larrowe stands for the people of the 6th District, and that he is the right man at the right time. In order to give him a fair chance to make his views known we need STUDENTS to work for us, and we need money. We don't have fat cats as contributors to hire paid "volunteers." We don't really want them. That's why we need your time and your money. A buck or two or an hour or two from us will do it. We think it's worth it.

P.S. Please don't wait for us to get in touch personally. We need your help to organize NOW. If you want to help call: 337-1087. If you want to contribute, mail to: P.O. Box 1801, E. Lansing.

Bob Seger's 2nd Brewery show builds to superb performance

By DAVE DIMARTINO
State News Reviewer

Bob Seger's appearance at the Brewery Monday night was noteworthy for several reasons.

Sing it, Seger

Bob Seger, a king of Michigan's rock scene for many years, played for the second time in recent months at the Brewery Monday night. Though Seger has never really reached national prominence, the release of a new album March 15 and the addition of a new group could change Seger's great local image to a national image.

First, it marked a swift return to East Lansing for Seger and his group. Seger provided a fine performance at the Brewery only one month ago, thus his most recent appearance seemed to be following that booking a bit too closely for comfort. He didn't draw as big a crowd as he plainly should have.

Secondly, the one-month interval between shows brought personnel changes in the form of organist Robin Robins, a 22-year-old from Grosse Pointe, whose previous claim to fame was being with the Frost for the two years that it continued without the presence of guitarist Dick Wagner. Robins has brought his influence into play on the Seger sound; the unorthodox use of a melotron during a slower number made an interesting combination with Seger's harsh, gritty voice.

Thirdly, because this reviewer was never part of the Detroit-Ann Arbor youth culture, my chance to enjoy Seger was increased that much more by his repeat performance in this one-month span. First time around, Seger seemed like a triumphant artist who was playing locally to repay his debt to those who made him famous. This abrupt return made it much clearer that Seger was indeed just one of the many musicians who has to work to make a living.

This time around, the music was all that was important. The show began with a version of "Bringin' it Back from Mexico," as familiar as most of the material that Seger played in the first set. Somehow the band didn't come across as being terrifically impassioned before their first break; a little more life would add much to their show to say the least, particularly on part of lead guitarist Drew Abbot, who seemed rooted to the floor at all times.

It soon became clear that Seger and his band were saving energies till their second set. It was a 100 per cent improvement. Emerging from the dressing room with slide guitar and slide in hand, Seger jumped onstage and began a roaring version of George Harrison's "Sue Me, Sue You Blues." From this point on, with Seger's energetic guitar playing accompanying Abbot, the real performance was underway. Fine music was heard for the rest of the night.

Seger obviously saved his strongest material for his last set. "Rambli" Gambler Man," "Lucifer," "Heavy Music," were all familiar that were strongly played. Interesting was his choice of new material; in one month Seger has added to his repertoire two songs, Ike and Tina Turner's "Nutbush City Limits," which unfortunately came across sounding like a Turner re-run, and a fine number by the Sensational Alex Harvey Band, the aptly titled "Gang Bang," which Seger carried off quite well.

After being called back for an encore, Seger explained that "Two Plus Two" couldn't be performed, no doubt because of the relative newness of organist Robins. This was something of a disappointment. However, a superb performance of "Need Ya," a song that wasn't performed here last January despite its prominence in Seger's most recent single, came in its place. This time around, it was a show-stopper.

Seger's performance proves his consistent talent; it does seem a shame that he has yet to truly be anything more than a local or critical success. Perhaps with the release of his new album, due on March 15, Seger will find a more receptive national audience awaiting him.

"Reprint of a Review of Behind the Green Door" from San Francisco After Dark, July, 1973
San Francisco is bored with pornography. Over 17000 pornographic features have been exhibited here, none of which have particularly excited the public. When Jim and Artie Mitchell, the entrepreneurs who operate the Offbeat Cinema, opened their own film "Behind the Green Door" they really had no right to expect a reaction any more positive than the predictably apathetic. Now 60 weeks later the film is still running. Eight times a day from 10 am to midnight the Green Door grinds on and there are always more eager patrons waiting to see it. (They must be eager, they pay four dollars to get in!)
Why?
There have been three extremely successful pornographic films, Deep Throat, Devil in Miss Jones, and Behind the Green Door. But of these the Green Door is the only one to have been successful here in the pornographic Center of America. Deep Throat was mildly but amusing, but nothing more. The "Green Door", however is genuinely erotic. It's a very sexy film. It is intended to arouse and it succeeds as no previous pornographic film has before. This I believe is why the film is doing so well. It is the most erotic film I've ever seen. It is hard core, its shows absolutely everything but it is all done tastefully. You may be objecting because it is so extremely explicit, however, if you are open to this kind of filmic experience, I strongly recommend it to you.
This is not to say that the film has no faults. The plot (putting it charitably) is thin — there is not very much dialogue and Marilyn Chambers (the lovely Flakes Girl) is not a supremely accomplished actress. But when you're watching the film, these problems somehow seem inconsequential. Again the film will not be to everybody's taste. However, if you enjoy this type of entertainment then "Behind the Green Door" is really the one to see.

Larrowe claims fund abuse, plans suit

By CRAIG PORTER
State News Staff Writer

MSU professor Charles P. Larrowe announced Tuesday he would file a class action suit this week against state Sen. William Ballenger, R - Delta Township, charging improper use of state money.

Larrowe, who recently announced his candidacy for the congressional seat which Charles Chamberlain, R - East Lansing, will vacate in 1975, charged Ballenger with illegal use of public funds in last week's mailing of approximately 100,000 of 200,000 questionnaires Ballenger had printed to gauge public opinion on Daylight Saving Time (DST).

Ballenger, whose announcement Friday that he would not run for re-election to the state Senate led to speculation that he would try for the 6th District seat, said Tuesday he authorized the mailing Jan. 21 when DST was becoming an issue in the state.

Later Tuesday, Ballenger said quick action on the DST issue caught him by surprise.

A DST bill passed the House 10 days ago and was only in a Senate standing committee for five days.

"As soon as this came out I realized I might be in trouble," Ballenger said.

When the bill left the State Affairs Committee Feb. 13, Ballenger canceled the mailing, but more than 100,000 of the questionnaires had already been mailed at a cost of $5,000. The Senate postponed action on the bill Tuesday and is expected to pass it today, limiting DST to the summer months.

Ballenger had anticipated that the bill would remain in committee for one to two months, allowing him time to get feedback from the questionnaires. However, a 1973 questionnaire sent by Ballenger to approximately 55,800 of his constituents brought only 4,000 responses in five months, or 15 per cent.

Larrowe, who made his charges at a press conference at the state Capitol, said none of the questionnaires were sent to residents of Ballenger's 30th Senatorial District.

"Instead," Larrowe charged, "he aimed his mailing at the very heart of the 6th District - the greater Lansing area - where he has acknowledged he is likely to run for Congress," Ballenger said senators customarily send mail outside their districts, claiming that Senate rules do not prohibit them from doing so.

Ballenger, who would not confirm his candidacy for the seat, said a "substantial number" of the questionnaires mailed had gone to parts of his senatorial district which lie outside the 6th district.

"You've got to realize that Dr. Larrowe is a candidate in that 6th District," Ballenger said, "and he may have decided to get some ink out of it (the situation)."

Larrowe said he was influenced to file the suit by a precedent - setting 1973 case in Muskegon County in which state Rep. Edgar A. Geerlings, R - Twin Lakes, was ordered to reimburse the state for two mailings he had sent to people who did not live in his district. That case is now under appeal in the Michigan Court of Appeals.

Ballenger said he would pay for the mailing if he were judged guilty.

ASMSU election board OKs candidates' petitions

Petitions of candidates for ASMSU Student Board positions and president were validated Tuesday by the ASMSU Elections Commission.

Thirty-four of 36 petitions were verified. Two petitions for the University College seat were declared invalid since neither petitioner was enrolled in University College.

Other than that seat, every other ASMSU seat has at least one candidate.

Arts and Letters and Education are the only colleges with one candidate.

In the College of Arts and Letters, Marcia Allen, a current board member, is running for re-election.

Tom Somers, presently college of Social Science James Madison representative, is a candidate for the presidency of ASMSU. Jim Cain, another current ASMSU member, is also running for president. Cain is presently head of ASMSU Labor Relations.

Neither President Ed Patton or Executive Assistant Jerry Bartrem will run for office in the election.

The election will be held during spring registration. A petition to be set up for students to pass through is expected to encourage voting.

In addition to ASMSU candidates, student voters will elect for student representatives to the Academic Council. There will be one ballot for both races. Candidates for Academic Council have not yet been determined.

Students will also vote on a constitutional amendment to allow them to select the ASMSU president. In the past, the ASMSU Board has selected its own president. If the amendment is not passed, the winner of the presidential race will not serve in the office.

Following is the list of candidates released by ASMSU Tuesday for the colleges: Arts and Letters - Marcia Allen; Education - William Pettes; Human Ecology - Jordan Rosenthal and Maggie James; Natural Science - Michael Spitzer, M. James Bode and John Thompson; Communication Arts - Harold J. Skinner and Paul W. King.

Other candidates are: Engineering - Nancy Sutate, Harry C. Doscher, Gene Vardell, Daniel Mageau and Peter Didrichsons; Business - Link Corkery, Karl Bush, Dean R. Pannell, Rick Budnick and Tom Bell; Agriculture - Arthur D. Siirila, Larry C. Harmon and John W. Youney; Social Science - Patrice Gajewski, Phillip Bradley, John Edmondson, Star Blohm and Frank Lessa.

For president of ASMSU, candidates are Robert Distler Jr., Victor M. Green, Tim Davis, James H. Beach, Richard C. Strong, Timothy F. Cain and Thomas G. Somers.

Jackson perpetuates women's progress

"The administration has realized that it has something to offer women in the field of sports. They have seen the desirable effects of athletics for women, and so they are now willing to put money into the program rather than to perpetuate a stepchild organization . . . People started realizing that women have a need to compete just as men do. These needs must be met in an organized manner."

By PAM WARD
State News Sports Writer

Her office is decorated with pictures of women athletes in action. The corners of the room are filled with boxes of gym shoes and uniforms. On the desk, there is a large pile of the newly printed women sports schedules which she proudly hands out to her visitors.

Nell C. Jackson, asst. athletic director in charge of women's sports, is soft-spoken and methodical. She talks slowly and deliberately, but she gets things done.

Jackson, associate professor of physical education, was named asst. athletic director during the summer. When she assumed her position in September, the women's program at MSU was just beginning to gain substantial financial and moral support from the University and the Athletic Council.

Jackson, energetic and strongly dedicated to women's sports, brought to East Lansing a host of ideas and philosophies that have slowly begun to filter into the MSU program. The corner stone to her philosophies on women's sports, however, can be summed up in one word — opportunity.

"My main concern is to provide a wide range of opportunity for women athletes to compete," Jackson said. "Women should have the opportunity to compete under desirable conditions, and we should provide them with the necessary facilities and budget to meet their needs."

Jackson is more than just a bundle of talk and ideas. Her manner is serene and relaxed but persistent, and she has succeeded, during her short tenure, to pioneer several improvements in the women's program.

Her biggest accomplishment, perhaps, was her ability to obtain an increased budget — the core of any successful program. The present $84,000 budget represents an approximate $50,000 increase from last year. Jackson attributes the increased support from the University to a general change in attitudes.

"The administration has realized that it has something to offer women in the field of sports," Jackson explained. "They have seen the desirable effects of athletics for women, and so they are now willing to put money into the program rather than to perpetuate a stepchild organization."

Jackson has been pleased

Director at work

Nell C. Jackson was named asst. athletic director in charge of women's sports in fall of 1973. In the six months she has been here, she has succeeded in pioneering several improvements in the women's sports program. One of these was achieving an approximate $50,000 increase in the budget.

with the recent progress of the status of the woman athlete and is impressed with the women's program at MSU.

"I like MSU and I enjoy working here," she said, leaning back in her chair. "It's not a highly pressured environment. People cooperate and are willing to help. This is what the women's program needs."

She can spot no vast deficiencies in the present program, but insists that it must be allowed to grow and channels must remain open for progress. Jackson has introduced significant improvements in the women's program.

For the first time, a tutoring service has been offered for women athletes. For the first time, medical services and facilities have been expanded for women. For the first time, women have printed schedules.

The offices of some of the women coaches and of the assistant athletic director have been moved to Jenison Fieldhouse, acknowledging that there is a women's varsity sports program outside of intramural or recreational activity. A large dressing room for the women athletes has been installed at Jenison.

"We're on the right road," Jackson said. "But as the program continues to develop we may find that we'll have to branch out farther. As the program grows there will be a need for more money and public recognition."

The credit for the recent improvements in the women's program cannot be given solely to her, Jackson points out. Women's athletics have undergone a gradual development through the years. Being a former track participant and coach, Jackson has seen first hand the massive increase in opportunities for women athletes. Jackson began her 10-year track career in 1944, and during that time she made the United States Olympic and Pan American teams. In 1951 she won a gold medal during the Pan American games in the 440 relay and a silver medal in the 200-meter run.

"The opportunities for competition have increased tremendously since the time I was participating," the former Olympic star said. "When I was running track in school the 200 was the longest event for women."

Jackson attributes the expansion of women's sports to three major factors. In the 1960s the United States Olympic Commission formed a women's committee. Its objective was to create interest in the field of women's athletics and to develop the Olympic sports for women.

"The Olympic Commission got to the grass roots level of the problem," Jackson explained. "They tried to get instructions to women at an early age by establishing national age groups."

A change in attitudes among physical education officials also emerged at this time. Until this time, competitive sports were thought to be harmful to women and detrimental to their health. Research, however, disproved this and physical education departments began to accept women in sports and began to expand their programs.

The third impetus to the recent progress of women's sports was the formation of the Division for Girls and Women's Sports (DGWS), an organization of physical education teachers.

"The DGWS began to work with the women's committee in helping to get people interested in the field of athletics," Jackson explained. "Teachers began looking at the role of women athletes and the increased interest was instrumental in the formation of women collegiate sports."

"People started realizing that women have a need to compete just as men do. These needs must be met in an organized manner. They set out to structure it and to change it in the proper way."

One of the offshoots of successful women's programs, Jackson said, is the expansion of coaching opportunities for women. A distinction can be made between a men's and women's program on the examination of some of the goals. A men's athletic program is geared more toward professionalism. To produce a professional athlete is one of its goals. These channels are currently fairly well blocked for women athletes. However, the area of coaching for women is being emphasized and gradually expanded.

"An expansion of the area of coaching is one byproduct of a healthy women's program and these opportunities are just coming out," Jackson said. "I'm hoping more of the young people will return after participating and give something back to the sport."

It's hard to say how many women will return to put the knowledge back into sports. One thing is certain, however, Jackson has returned and MSU is her target.

Mikki Baile's philosophy a part of women's sports

"Coaching is a higher form of teaching. I got a lot out of sports in college and, I wanted to give other people the opportunity to enjoy it like I have. Some of my happier moments have been watching people grow up through sports. . . In sports, it's more than just the number of baskets made and the games won."

By JACK WALKDEN
State News Sports Writer

To Mikki Baile, coaching isn't rah-rah tactics or winning one for the Gipper.

It's the art of conveying a thought.

Baile, in her second year on the women's coaching staff at MSU believes in team play, not individualism.

"We have 10 people working together, not just five starters," Baile said. "We have depth and experience this year, so I've been able to substitute more. To be a winner, everyone has to be able to get along with each other. I think we have a lot of that this year on the team."

Baile's philosophy has been working for the Spartans. This year's basketball team is off to its best start on record, winning nine of its first 10 games entering Tuesday's game at Western Michigan.

In just her second year of coaching, the Gloucester, N.J. native is no stranger to the sports field. She participated in four sports in high school, including field hockey, basketball, lacrosse and softball.

Baile attended West Chester State College in Pennsylvania because "it has a very strong physical education program."

Baile played field hockey, basketball and lacrosse for four years in college and then played all three on national teams. She also played on the field hockey team which toured the world in 1971 and which went to England and Holland in 1973. This summer the team will tour Africa for about six weeks.

"It's quite a thrill playing on a touring national team," Baile said. "It does, however, take a lot of work and preparation beforehand, and it takes a lot of time out of your life."

"I feel a lot closer to the United States when I'm away from it. You appreciate it more when away. After seeing other countries in other situations, you're proud of the U.S., even in this time of crisis."

"It's a personal experience especially in women's athletics. It's not a celebrity situation. No one even knows you're away because there's no publicity."

Baile was looking for a teaching position upon graduation from college, but when the MSU coaching job became vacant, she took it.

"They offered me the job and I took it," Baile said. "They were looking for a team sports coach, and someone had given them my name. They called me. I never applied for it."

"Coaching is a higher form of teaching, anyway. I got a lot out of sports in college, and I wanted to give other people the opportunity to enjoy it like I have."

"Some of my happier moments have been watching people grow up through sports. Of course I'm excited when the team makes 20 layups in under two minutes, but sports are more tangible than that. In sports, it's more than just the number of baskets made and the games won."

Baile believes the women's athletics program at MSU has made great progress in recent years.

"The program here has a lot to offer the student," she said. "One thing which was lacking here is tradition, but now that the ball is rolling, we're gaining this tradition."

"We've been able to accumulate a pride that was never here before. We're beginning to get recognition from other universities.

"Respect of women's athletics is what we need and it's coming."

Baile doesn't like to set personal goals for herself.

"I try not to look too far ahead," she said. "I know for a life goal it'd be nice to get married and settle down. Professionally, I don't really have any expounded goals. I enjoy it here and it's a fine experience, but in the same sense the world is pretty big."

Women's gymnastics team gaining national acclaim under new coach

"Some people make a big deal about women's sports, saying we are challenging men and all that, but I can't see it. There is no way that a woman can compete on equal terms with men in gymnastics."

By ARTIE GARNER

While MSU has always been known for its fine men's gymnastics teams, the women's team this year has moved into national prominence with the arrival of a new coach and several promising freshmen.

The team is being coached by Barbara McKenzie, who came here from Clarion State College. For McKenzie, it is the fulfillment of a dream that started in eighth grade.

"My mother was a self-taught gymnast and dancer," McKenzie said. "It was just natural for me to pick it up. I started coming to MSU when I was in sixth grade and took lessons from the men's coach, George Szyplu. About the eighth grade I decided I wanted to be a coach at MSU," McKenzie said.

That dream took a long time to be realized. McKenzie started her freshman year at MSU and became disenchanted with the setup of women's sports. She transferred to Southern Illinois University to complete her four years.

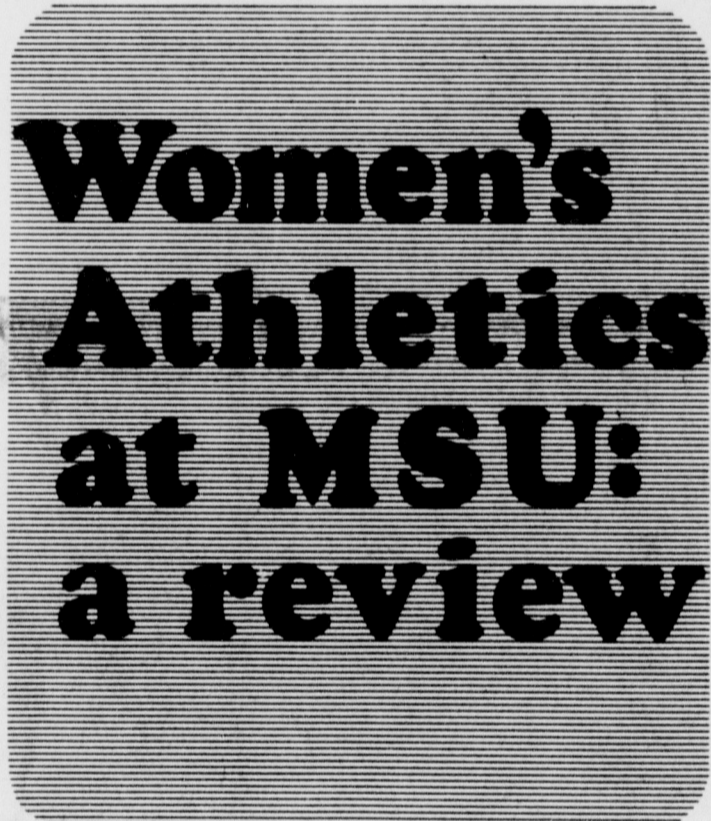

"When I first started here the program was really in rough shape as far as women's sports went. So I transferred to Southern Illinois. But I always wanted to come back to MSU at some time."

McKenzie worked as an assistant gymnastics coach for the MSU team for several years before going to Clarion State College for the 1973 season as head coach.

After the '73 season, which saw Clarion finish sixth in the nation, McKenzie saw her dream come true and she returned to MSU.

"The program for women's sports has improved greatly in the past three years, not only in gymnastics but in all women's sports. The teams are all having good years, and MSU is starting to get some national recognition for its women's athletics," she said. "Nell Jackson is the new athletic director for women's sports, and she has done a fine job so far with the program. The future for women's sports at MSU is really exciting," McKenzie said.

New to the team, along with McKenzie, this year is freshman Ann Weaver. Weaver has been a great asset to the team and competes in four events. She has taken much of the load off Captain Raeanne Miller, and consistently divides up category victories with her.

Weaver is a graduate of East Lansing High School, where she competed under June Szyplu, wife of the MSU's Men's coach. In high school, Weaver was selected captain of the all-state team, and won the all-around award at the state meet. She was also an honors student.

"At first I hated gymnastics, probably because I was always falling on my head," Weaver said. "But I felt obligated, I guess, and stuck with it, and now I'm glad I did."

"Barb is the best women's coach I've ever worked with and she should receive much of the credit for the teams fine showing so far."

"We are a very young team and when we get some experience, and mature some, we will have a very good chance at a national championship," she said. "We are in an extremely tough region and doing well in it."

Captain Miller has been coming to MSU since fifth grade for gymnastics training, and was the only MSU woman to compete in the NCAA finals last year. She has been the driving force behind the team, and has accounted for many triumphs on the balance beam and floor exercises.

Andrea Schwartz, freshman, and Cathy Welsh, junior, have both competed in the all-around events and captured critical points with their high places. Sue Bissonnette, sophomore, has placed strong in the uneven bars and vaulting, while the return of Vicki Spencer, freshman, from injuries promises to help the team.

"Everyone on the team is very close and we all pull for everyone else. The freshmen on the team work very hard and there is a general positive attitude," Miller said.

No tomboy tags for Linda Stoick

"In order to receive, you have to give. Basketball helped me receive the light. We've got to get along, just got back from Western Illinois, riding together 12 hours in a car. People can get on your nerves. But was great. The different personalities. Emotionally, I've been getting into it this year."

By LYNN HENNING
State News Sports Writer

Tuesday night Linda Stoick didn't make basketball practice. But it didn't matter to her. She was in Grand Rapids, helping with the election returns that were sending Robert Vander Veer to victory in his bid for election to the U.S. Congress. Her mother had won and she was happy.

A prelaw student who plans on a career in politics, Linda Stoick has weathered all the comments and stereotypes directed toward a woman athlete. Sure, she was called a tomboy when she was young. And so many have presumed she's a physical education major. She plays basketball, though, because she likes it.

"I'm into people more now, their personalities," she said. "What I'm learning from playing basketball will stay with me forever. Like, in how to get along with people."

"In order to receive, you have to give. Basketball has helped me receive that light. We've got to get along, just got back from Western Illinois, riding together for 12 hours in a car. People can get on your nerves. But it was great. The different personalities. Emotionally, I've really been getting into it this year."

She likes the way MSU has recognized its women's program with more money, better facilities etc. She doesn't like a few of the inequities that do exist, however. Inequities the men don't have to put up with.

"If the Addidas they pass out during the year don't fit, make them fit," she said crisply. "If you need high-cuts and they have low-cuts, you wear them. But if I'm not supposed to drink on the road, or make a fool of myself because representing MSU, then they can afford to give us shoes of our own and launder our uniforms."

But the bitterness doesn't get in the way. "Nothing is as strong as a group of people doing something together," she said. "I want to have that feeling for a time."

Car pool applications processed today

By SUSAN AGER
State News Staff Writer

Nearly 1,200 faculty and staff applications for car pool partners will be run through a University computer at 2 p.m. today, at a cost to the University of about 72 cents per application. Printouts of potential partners should be in the campus mail for distribution to departments by late this afternoon or early Thursday morning, Andy Johanson, supervisor of applications programming, said Tuesday. Applications for the car pooling service, nicknamed CESAR (Conserve Energy - Share A Ride), were distributed in early February to over 8,000 faculty and staff through their departments. The response represents about 15 per cent of the distribution. Robert Perrin, vice president for University relations, said he was not disappointed with the returns but called them "a fairly modest response," which he attributed to a fuel shortage in Lansing which is apparently not too severe. "Another factor in the relatively low response could be a great many of our faculty and staff live close to campus, and are not involved in long commutes each day," he said. "Car pooling is thus not particularly to their advantage." Johanson said the computer run would use approximately a half-hour of computer time, costing about $360. Key punch charges would total about another $180, and the separating and sorting of printouts will cost about $25, he estimated. What could have been the greatest cost to the University - a computer program to perform such a matching - was absorbed by the Burroughs Corp., who provided the program free of charge, including 16 man-hours to install it in the MSU computer. Johanson said Burroughs has advertised the free car pool program and free installation in several computer journals. There is apparently no connection between the free service and President Wharton's position on the Burroughs Corp. Board of Directors.

U-M graduate aides vote on strike

Graduate assistants at the University of Michigan voted Tuesday on whether to strike to get the university to recognize a recently formed teaching assistant union. At press time the results of the vote had not been tabulated. If the strike was approved by 801 of the 1,600 teaching assistants, picket lines will be formed in front of classroom buildings in an effort to keep all students from attending classes. Cindy Hill, executive editor of the Michigan Daily, the campus newspaper, said Tuesday that a day-long rain may have lowered the number of teaching assistants voting, and that the vote could swing either way. The quarrel between the assistants and the university's centers on the university's refusal to bargain with the Graduate Employees Organization of Teaching Fellows. Officials told union representatives last week that they would not begin talks on union demands until the organization is certified by the Michigan Employment Relations Commission. Union members object to the cost and time involved in obtaining a certification vote. Union demands include recognition as a bargaining agent, a waiver of tuition, cost-of-living salary increases and a limit on class size. The strike would hit the university during the midterm examination period, which is followed by a week-long spring break in early March.

Ping pong meet

The preliminary competition of the women's table tennis tournament will take place today and Thursday in 118 Women's Intramural Bldg. Singles matches will begin at 7 p.m. today. Each match will be the best two of three games of 15 points. Doubles preliminary action will take place Thursday. Each match is the best two of three games of 21 points. More detailed information and rules are available in a handout found at the Women's IM desk.

Johanson said the cost of an additional three or four days labor spent to make the program more efficient on the computer would total about $300. Applications for the car pooling service will be available to students at spring term early registration and registration. The applications will be identical to those used by faculty and staff, including the opportunity for long-distance commuters from as far as Detroit and Saginaw to see fellow commuters. Perrin said he hopes to distribute a questionnaire midway through spring term to those faculty, staff and students who applied to the service to see how many actually carried through in forming a car pool.

ENERGY and the ENVIRONMENT

This spring Lyman Briggs College and the Physics Department will offer the interdisciplinary course "Energy and the Environment". The course, now in its third year, has been expanded in order to accommodate the students who were not able to enroll in the course last year.

Topics Include:
How long might the energy problem last?
Do we have the resources (coal, oil, gas, fusion, etc.) to meet the growing demand for energy?
What are the long term possibilities for these and other sources of energy?
What are the problems associated with increasing energy use?
What conservation measures are necessary?
What are the social, economic and political implications of limited energy?
What is the effect of energy as a thermal pollutant?

There will be guest lectures by scientists, politicians, economists, industry representatives and others from on and off campus. Reading for the course will be Scientific America, Physics Today, The New York Times, etc. and a text prepared by the department. Special evening sections are available for persons not able to attend during the day. NO PREREQUISITES - OPEN TO ALL MAJORS OF ALL COLLEGES, 3 CREDITS (can be counted as science credits).

The Advent Loudspeaker

Both the loudspeakers shown - the original ADVENT loudspeaker and the smaller ADVENT loudspeaker - are intended to be compared in audible performance, including frequency band width, with the most elaborate and expensive speaker available. That may be difficult to accept, we realize, but it is true and verifiable in listening test.

We at HI-FI BUYS know that you can spend 300 dollars on a speaker then one costing 100 dollars! Generally, the only positive statement that can be made regarding loudspeakers and their relative cost is that the more you spend the bigger the enclosure is and therefore they will probably play louder. In most cases we don't think these are good reasons for you to part with 300 dollars. It may be comforting to know that it's possible for HI-FI BUYS to sell you as good a product for 70 dollars, by golly we will, and that's a promise.

THE GRADUATE

For the spatial sensation of stereo you need good audio equipment. At HI-FI BUYS we sell only the best. That's why we're the most recommended audio store in mid-Michigan.

We will recommend stereo systems to you like our GRADUATE. A stereo system composed of the NIKKO 7070 AM/FM Stereo receiver with 40 watt's R.M.S./channel. A very excellent receiver with all the power, sensitivity, and selectivity most of us will ever need.

We have matched the large ADVENT loudspeakers with this system because of their uncompromising excellence in sound propagation.

The BSR 610X automatic turntable complete this system with its synchronous motor, stereo muting switch, etc. Base/dust cover and SHURE M93E magnetic cartridge with elliptical diamond stylus.

This system is backed by HI-FI BUYS own service, department who offers you at no extra cost a 5 year protection plan.

Holden Hall students hold first pizza eating contest

Hundreds of students turned out to cheer for their favorite floor pigs Monday night at the premiere of the Holden Hall Pizza Eating Contest in the hall cafeteria.

The contest, sponsored by the Student Life Committee, with equipment supplied by the Holden Pizza Factory, grew out of the hall's famed beer chugging contests.

Floor relay teams of two members each raced the clock to consume 12-inch cheese pizzas. When one member finished a half, the other began.

The officials, Jim Murton, food service manager; Allan Wilke and Willie Wilson, graduate advisers, and Sharon Gatti, Holden Hall director, were allowed to disqualify teams for not swallowing or leaving excess crumbs, but no one violated the rules. Everyone put up a valiant struggle against queasy stomachs and sore jaws.

The winning time of 3:41 was set by freshmen Chris Martin, 519 E. Holden Hall and Mark Heorodt, 504 E. Holden Hall. They split a first prize of $25.

"I feel fine," Heorodt said after triumphantly marching off the eating platform. "The trick is not to worry about the crust. You have to take the middle first and shove it down in one gulp, then work on the crust."

Second-place team of Ed Prehlik, freshman, 407 E. Holden Hall, and Rolf Embertson, sophomore, 425 E. Holden Hall had a time of 4:07. You just have to smash it down and swallow without chewing, they both agreed.

Flora Jenkins, junior, 107 W. Holden Hall, stuffed her lagging partner's remaining pizza in her own mouth before ambitiously attacking her half of the bargain. However, she eventually gave up and took the unfinished portion to her friends.

"Lordy, Mama, I don't know if this will affect business," Thomas Kaiser, emcee and head supervisor at the pizza factory, said in his best Italian accent.

National Safety Council says DST not killing kids

CHICAGO (AP) — The National Safety Council said Tuesday a survey shows the switch to Daylight Saving Time has had little or no effect on the number of early morning traffic fatalities among school-age children.

Vincent Tofany, council president, said a survey in 42 states and the District of Columbia showed no appreciable difference in the number of early morning fatalities in January 1974 compared with January 1973.
