

Raccoon presence high on campus

By LAURA MILLER

Raccoons are so thick on the MSU campus this year, at least one student says he has to almost push through them for a way through them," Edward Morley, a Lansing senior, said.

"It's one thing when you see a rabbit in the bushes, but it's another thing when the raccoons are all over the place," Joan Deppa, a graduate student in journalism, who saw four in the night behind Owen Hall, said.

"Despite the presence of about 43,000 students at MSU, raccoons are abundant," Dudderar, MSU wildlife specialist said the campus is one of the best breeding territories with plenty of den sites along the Red Cedar River, numerous wood lots and fruit and nut bearing trees. They are attracted to campus areas where students leave left-over lunches or food for the ducks.

Good areas to spot raccoons are near the baseball diamonds along the river on west campus, behind residence halls on east campus and in other wood lots.

At night, they are often seen rummaging through garbage containers behind buildings or prowling lawns. They come regularly to some buildings where they are fed by students and custodians.

"We saw them every night at work at Kedzie Hall, because they knew they would be fed," Morley said. "One of my bosses used to buy cookies to feed them during work break every night. They are the fattest raccoons you've ever seen." "Sometimes they just sit in a tree near Erickson — their bellies hanging out, watching the kids and sunning themselves," he laughed.

Raccoons are one animal that fit in well with man, Dudderar explained.

"They are just like people — some indifferent, some curious, some mean," he said. "Raccoon personalities are very comparable to human beings."

"But I wouldn't go as far as saying they're friendly," he warned. "Tolerant, maybe."

Dudderar said the only raccoon problem reported has come from East Lansing residents who complained the animals were eating sweet corn in gardens. No one has reported being bitten by a raccoon, Richard O. Bernitt, director of MSU Public Safety, said.

But 10 years ago, raccoons and other animals at MSU caused more of a problem. In the past, raccoons have made their homes and raised young in the attics and side walls of older buildings like Linton and Chittendon Halls, the Journalism Building and the demolished Music Practice Building.

"The big thing is getting one out when it dies in a side wall," Bernitt said. "Then the varmit has to be cut out of the wall."

Bernitt estimated the University spends about $25,000 to $30,000 a year in pest control.

A two-man team responds to a gamut of pest control problems such as bats in attics, skunks in window wells and

There are a few empty chairs now, but when the crowds start piling in here at Lizard's and other area bars, East Lansing Fire Dept. officials move in and warn bar managers of overcrowding. A $500 fine against Alley-Ey for overcrowding is pending and area bar managers say they are beginning to feel the pinch from both customers and safety officials.

LOCAL BARS OVERCROWDED

Fire officials turn on heat

By JOHN TINGWALL
State News Staff Writer

Though no East Lansing bars have yet leveled by fire, bar managers are feeling the heat from pressure applied by city fire and police officials to maintain safe capacity standards in their bars.

And though police and fire officials say they have not stepped up the number of city inspections since a State News exposé of frequent overcrowding inspections a month ago, bar managers say they have begun to feel new pressure from fire inspectors.

In one case, the city is even considering its first warrant for prosecution of a bar owner for overcrowding his bar and legal capacity limits.

The case, being studied by East Lansing Attorney Dennis McGinty, involves a city violation in the Alle-Ey bar at a TG Oct. 25.

The time has come to step on the toes of bars doing the overcrowding," East Lansing fire chief Philip Patriarche said. "When we went in to inspect the Alle-Ey on the 25th, you couldn't move. Unfortunately, we should have done something about situations like this a long time ago."

Patriarche said the basement occupancies of Dooley's, Lizard's and the Alle-Ey create hazards different from most bars and restaurants.

"Even if they have the required number of exits or more, we could still lose people in a panic situation," Patriarche said.

Such a tragedy occurred this summer, when a New York discotheque burned, killing 24 people. The basement restaurant was described as "packed" by witnesses.

Patriarche said he has spoken to the city manager about increasing the number of inspections from once a month, and was told by the city manager an increase would be his decision.

"If things don't settle down, we'll conduct as many as two, three, or four inspections monthly," he said. "If that's what it takes to establish compliance with the capacity limits, we'll do it."

Managers at Dooley's, Lizard's and the Alle-Ey all contend that police and fire inspections have been stepped up in the last month.

"I talked to one police officer and he said the limits would be more strictly enforced from now on," Kent Harder, Lizard's manager, said. "They look like they're conducting a head count almost every time they're in here lately."

Police Sergeant Richard Murray, disclaiming an increase in police inspections, said the police department issued its first overcrowding citation to the Liquor Control Commission this year for a violation at Lizard's Oct. 18, one week before the Alle-Ey violation. Police conduct random inspections of bars as often as three times a week. The Liquor Control Commission sets hearing dates if enough citations accumulate from one bar.

"I assumed we got cited on the 18th," Harder said. "If we did, it would be the first time we've ever been cited to the Liquor Control Commission in my two years as manager."

Dems win trustee seats; ideological balance tipped

By PETE DALY
State News Staff Writer

The political balance of power on the MSU Board of Trustees was tipped to the Democrats Tuesday with the election of Democrats John Bruff of Fraser and Raymond Krolikowski of Birmingham. The new board composition beginning January is six Democrats and two Republicans.

Incumbent Republicans who were defeated are Frank Merriman of Deckerville and Kenneth Thompson of East Lansing. Both are conservatives whose replacement by the two Democrats is expected to make a noticeable change in the board's decisions.

In spite of party lines, board politics and debates usually stem from ideological identification. Traditionally, Merriman, a dairy farmer, and Thompson, a former general manager for Michigan Bell, were the only conservatives on the board. Three other members are classed as liberal, and the remaining three as swing votes — one leaning towards the conservatives, and the other two toward the liberals.

The three liberals on the current board are Democrats Pat Carrigan, of Ann Arbor, Don Stevens of Bloomfield Hills and Blanch Martin of East Lansing.

Aubrey Radcliffe, R - Lansing, and Jack Stack, R - Alma, are two of the three swing voters who tend toward the liberal side. Warren Huff, D - Plymouth, is an unpredictable swing voter.

The loss of the two conservatives' seats to Democrats Bruff and Krolikowski — both lawyers — is good news to liberals Martin and Carrigan. Although both told the State News they were not well acquainted with Krolikowski, they are acquainted with Bruff and expect both newcomers will help shift the board to a more liberal stance.

Analysis

"According to Mr. Bruff's campaign publicity, he supports student input on the board and is against closed board meetings related to public business," Carrigan said. "He will be a strong addition to the board, and I assume Mr. Krolikowski will be, also."

Martin said he foresees no strong shift in the board's decisions, but he feels the election outcome is an "improvement."

"Both Mr. Thompson and Mr. Merriman are friends of mine, and I think they have served the board well," Martin said. "But we weren't sitting on the same side of the fence too often."

Thompson told the State News Wednesday that he did not know if the two new members would effect much change on the board because he did not know much about them personally.

"All I know is that they are two lawyers. We sure as hell don't need two lawyers!" Thompson said.

Bruff, 45, has a long history of work in higher education, and was an early trustee at Oakland University. He supports the election of students to the MSU Board of Trustees if it were ruled constitutional in the future.

Michigan Attorney General Frank Kelley has barred students from running, contending it would be a conflict of interest and unconstitutional.

Thompson, on the other hand, has staunchly opposed student membership on the board.

Krolikowski, 46, lacks experience in higher education and is not well acquainted with MSU, but he professes to care a great deal about students.

Trustee Stevens said he thinks both new members are the type who will support him and the other two liberals, Carrigan and Martin.

"For instance, I think both would have supported the liberalized housing option. And they probably would have supported us where we failed in the past because of a tie or lost votes," Stevens said.

Both outgoing Republicans opposed the co-ed living option which became available for the first time this fall.

"With Bruff and Krolikowski we have got a chance to be a more open university, and perhaps more receptive to student views," Huff said.

GOP candidates were also hurting in the race for seats on the University of Michigan Board of Regents. Democrats Sarah G. Power, 39, of Ann Arbor, and Tom Roach, a 45-year-old Grosse Pointe man, polled more than a million votes each to beat out their Republican opponents, Dona S. Parker of Howell, and David Upton, a former state legislator.

New Wayne State Trustees are Democrats Mildred Jeffrey, an active member of the United Auto Workers, and 23-year-old Michael Einheuser of Detroit, who administers a home for runaways.

Carr defeats Taylor by 544 votes

By MIKE ARNETT
State News Staff Writer

Bob Carr has won an incredibly close 6th District congressional race over Republican opponent Cliff Taylor.

Democrat Carr won by 544 votes out of 147,362 cast, according to figures released Wednesday afternoon by the elections division of the Michigan secretary of state's office.

Taylor told his followers at 4:30 a.m. Wednesday that he had apparently lost the election. Taylor's campaign manager, Spencer Abraham, said Wednesday that Taylor would not make an official concession until the possibility of a recount was established.

Abraham said a request for a recount, which would cost about $1,500, was a possibility.

Carr withheld any victory statement Wednesday but scheduled a press conference for 9 a.m. today.

Carr lost the 6th District congressional race in 1972 to 16-year incumbent Republican Charles Chamberlain by less than 2,500 votes. In 1972 about 192,000 votes were cast in the race.

The deciding factor in Carr's victory was the Jackson County vote. In 1972 Chamberlain swept the traditionally Republican county by 29,712 to 20,830. This year Carr took a 21,107 to 18,665 edge.

"Rural Jackson County was the only area that really disappointed us," Abraham said. "Chamberlain got 60 per cent here and we got only 42 per cent."

MSU students voted heavily for Carr, giving him 6,778 votes (66 per cent) to Taylor's 2,197 (27 per cent) from student precincts in East Lansing.

Taylor was not disappointed with the student vote. In 1972 Chamberlain polled only 11 per cent of student votes.

On-campus precincts reported 5,204 student votes, while off-campus student precinct votes totaled 5,057. On-campus voters favored Carr by a slightly wider margin.

In the entire city of East Lansing Carr received 57 per cent of the votes, Taylor 37 per cent and Jones 5 per cent. For Carr this was down from 1972 when he polled 74 per cent of the East Lansing vote.

In Ingham County, which includes Lansing and East Lansing, Carr outpolled Taylor, 43,425 to 41,487. This was considerably down from 1972 when Carr beat Chamberlain in Ingham County by 64,802 to 49,315. However, Abraham said that he expected even more support from rural Ingham County and it was lacking.

Carr gained in solidly Republican Livingston and Washtenaw counties compared to 1972.

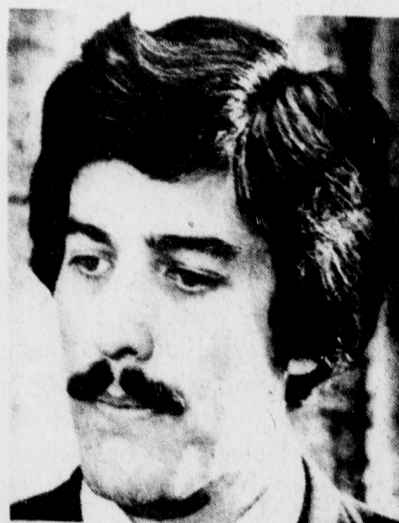

In Livingston County Carr trailed Taylor, 7,160 to 5,387. In 1972 Chamberlain swept the county by a 9,756 to 5,178 tally.

In Washtenaw County the change since 1972 was even larger. That year Chamberlain trounced Carr in Washtenaw County by 7,735 to 3,567. This year Carr closed the gap and trailed Taylor by only 5,479 to 3,220.

Carr held early leads during the campaign of as much as 25 per cent. But Taylor began a media blitz criticizing Carr's stands on national health care and tax reform and the gap quickly closed. The week before the election Taylor released a private poll which showed him leading by two per cent.

The Carr campaign realized that the policy of ignoring the Taylor charges was not working. So less than a week before the election Carr held a press conference accusing Taylor of "poisoning" the campaign with lies and distortions in advertisements.

Ford, Dems pledge cooperation

From Wire Services

WASHINGTON (AP) — Their congressional muscles bulging, Democrats have been re-armed by off-year elections for certain seats with President Ford over the right way to handle the nation's economic ills.

There was Democratic talk of such confrontations, but on the day after their election victories, party leaders put the basis on possible compromise and cooperation with Ford.

Ford, whose party was stunned by the Democrats' off-year landslide, readily agreed. "We will meet Congress more halfway," he said through an aide.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield came to the House to talk cooperation and compromise with the Republican president. And a source close to the House leadership said, "We make suggestions, but if anything is to be done, Ford is to have to agree. The name of the game is going to be compromise."

With virtually all votes counted, Republicans faced this picture:

- Democrats had captured 43 extra House seats for a total of 291, a clear two-thirds majority just short of the 295 seats Democrats won in Lyndon B. Johnson's landslide a decade ago.
- Democrats had picked up three Senate seats, for a total of 61.
- They had scored a net gain of four governorships, including the biggest states of New York and California, for a new total of 36.

The GOP president, in office less than three months, was described by aides as philosophical about the outcome. "He's seen good years and bad years and this was a bad year," a spokesman said, adding that the Republican setbacks "didn't come as any great surprise."

Ford had warned that big Democratic gains could result in a "dictatorial... veto-proof Congress." But even with Democrats holding a two-thirds edge in the House, the wholesale overriding of Ford vetoes is not a realistic prospect because of philosophic

Nixon treated for pneumonia

Former President Richard M. Nixon is suffering from a slight case of pneumonia and a partial collapse of his right lung and is being treated with antibiotics, his doctor said Wednesday.

Nixon has a slightly elevated temperature due to pneumonitis, described as a synonym for pneumonia, centered in a small area of his right lung. He also suffers from irritation caused by hematoma, or blood mass, in the small of his back.

Dr. John Lungren, Nixon's personal physician, also said the fluid in Nixon's left lung was continuing to diminish and that the former president was exhibiting "slow but gradual improvement."

Defendants ask for mistrial

Two defendants in the Watergate coverup trial Wednesday asked the judge to declare a mistrial because of the surprise disclosure earlier this week of the existence of a memo from convicted Watergate burglar E. Howard Hunt.

Lawyers for John D. Ehrlichman said the memo forces them to change strategy in midstream and so denies their client a fair trial.

Lawyers for John N. Mitchell based their motions on grounds that the memo bolsters Hunt's credibility in the eyes of the jury.

The Hunt memo surfaced through Hunt's original lawyer, William O. Bittman, nearly two years after it was written. It laid out in skeleton form the Watergate coverup two months before the original Watergate defendants went on trial.

Bittman had several times told the Watergate grand juries that he knew nothing of the memo, which Hunt described from the witness stand.

Jackson may announce early

Sen. Henry M. Jackson says he may decide before early January whether to declare himself a candidate for the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination.

The Washington Democrat said during a brief interview on CBS Tuesday night that he will make the announcement "substantially earlier" than he had planned previously.

The chief issue for 1976 is the economy, Jackson said.

"And I think the people are just fed up and they want action and we're all going to have to move sooner and faster and much more effectively," he said.

Argentina in state of siege

President Isabel Peron declared a state of siege in violence-racked Argentina Wednesday.

Mrs. Peron, widow of Juan Peron, took the step after a top-level meeting on how to curtail violence, the government said.

The surprise announcement came just four days after the chief of the federal police, Alberto Villar and his wife were assassinated by leftist guerrillas.

The state of siege will allow the government to act against crime and terrorism without recourse to normal court procedures.

Mrs. Peron's government, now 129 days old, has been weakened considerably by a rash of politically connected crimes that has left at least 136 people dead, the latest victim shot to death Wednesday.

Kissinger, Arafat to meet?

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, on the second day of his latest Middle East peace mission, appeared Wednesday to leave open the door for eventual contact between the United States and the Palestinian guerrilla leadership.

"We will remain in close contact with all of the parties and encourage progress wherever the possibility exists," Kissinger said after a two-hour meeting in Cairo with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Then the American secretary of state left for Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

Yasir Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the leading guerrilla group, was in Cairo throughout Kissinger's 18-hour stay and met with Sadat on Tuesday before the American arrived. But State Department spokesman Robert Anderson repeatedly denied that Kissinger or his aides would see Arafat.

Hijackers take Jordanian plane

Hijackers, possibly Jordanian officers disgruntled over King Hussein's Palestinian stand, seized a Jordanian airliner Wednesday and ordered it to Libya where the plane and passengers were released unharmed.

After landing at Benghazi, the hijackers sought political asylum in Libya.

The plane was hijacked on a Jordanian domestic flight from Amman, the capital, to Aqaba on the coast. An airline official identified one of the gunmen as a sky marshal assigned to guard against hijackings.

Libya, a staunch supporter of Palestinian extremists, considers Hussein an obstacle to Arab unity and has given sanctuary to Palestinian guerrilla hijackers in the past.

National spotlight shines on Milliken's GOP win; political future discussed

DETROIT (UPI) — Gov. William G. Milliken was a shining star today in a Republican party riddled with defeat.

With all but 1 per cent of the vote in, Milliken had rolled up 1,347,336 votes — 52 per cent of the total cast. Sander Levin wound up with 1,233,814 votes. Third party candidate Zolton Ferency captured one per cent of the vote.

The magnitude of the triumph thrust the 52-year-old department store heir into the national spotlight on a day that saw other prominent GOP figures in other states fall by the wayside.

For Levin, a 43-year-old suburban Berkley attorney, the defeat probably marked the end of a career in politics that included six years in the state Senate, a stint as state Democratic chairman and two unsuccessful bids for the governorship.

A jubilant Milliken declared Wednesday his political future lies in Michigan and not as a contender for national office.

"I have no national ambitions whatsoever,"

Milliken told UPI in an interview after winning re-election in the face of a nationwide sweep by Democrats.

"I am not the least interested in national office. My only interest is right here in Michigan and I intend to spend the next four years doing the best job I can for this state," the 52-year-old governor said.

Some GOP officials already are thinking aloud that Milliken would make an attractive candidate for national office.

Observers said Milliken may be approached to contest the U.S. Senate seat now held by Democrat Philip A. Hart, up for re-election in 1976.

There have been suggestions that Hart might not seek re-election, in which case a likely Democratic nominee would be Rep. Donald Riegle, a popular Republican turned Democrat.

If Milliken accepted an appointive post, he would be following the footsteps of his political mentor, former Gov. George Romney, who accepted a cabinet post in 1969 and was succeeded as governor by Milliken.

Michigan appeals court races go down to wire in 3 districts

By United Press International
Nonpartisan Court of Appeals races were tightly fought in all three Michigan districts.

In the 1st District, Wayne

County Circuit Court Judge Richard M. Maher held a slight edge with 34 per cent of the vote counted.

Maier had polled 80,270 votes against 67,370 for Henry

Heading, a Records Court judge. Nathan J. Kaufman and Joseph A. Sullivan, both Wayne County circuit judges had polled 75,452 and 50,679 votes, respectively.

The 2nd District race, which includes the Lansing area, was nearly a standoff between Lansing District Judge Michael F. Cavanagh, with 53,814 votes, and Bloomfield Hills attorney Michael J. Kelly with 51,322. Warren attorney George E. Montgomery had 28,322 votes, trailing third-place Bernard L. Kaufman, an Ann Arbor attorney who had 35,104.

In the 3rd District, Circuit Judge Donald E. Holbrook of Clare led with 104,881 votes. In second was Circuit Judge Daniel L. Walsh with 92,271, trailed by state Sen. Robert Richardson, R-Saginaw, with 61,779. Another circuit judge from Grand Rapids, John T. Letts, had polled 52,541 votes.

Saudi Arabia vows to stabilize oil prices

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Saudi Arabia pledged Wednesday to try to hold the line on oil prices, or work for a nominal cut, at a meeting of oil-producing nations next month in Vienna.

Saudi Foreign Minister Omar Sakkaf made the promise to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger after Kissinger met for 90 minutes with King Faisal.

"The policy of my kingdom and my government is that we keep the prices as they are and at the same time work for the lowering of the prices to bring them down, albeit symbolically," Sakkaf told Kissinger as the secretary was leaving for Jordan.

"And if we could bring them down more than symbolically we would," Sakkaf added. Saudi Arabia and the other 12 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meet in Vienna in mid-December to discuss oil prices.

MAY HELP CUT PRODUCT COSTS

MSU chemist produces oddball ion

By DENISE CRITTENDON

State News Staff Writer

Because of an MSU professor's recent discovery, elements may become malleable into more useful forms and production costs for new or expensive materials may drop.

James Dye, professor of chemistry and recipient of the University's Distinguished Faculty Award for 1973-74, recently produced the first negative sodium ion. Prior to Dye's experiments, the only sodium ions were the relatively cheap - to - produce positive ions. Positive ions were thought to be the only possible result of a process combining different elements with sodium, an ingredient in table salt.

Positive sodium ions are inactive compounds, whereas negative sodium ions are highly active.

For the first time, Dye said, chemists will be able to investigate new methods of compound production involving sodium ions. Since negative ions easily react with other elements and become positive in the process, they may help change other elements into more useful forms, he said.

By utilizing negative sodium ions, new materials may be produced or expensive materials may be produced cheaper.

At this point, it is unclear exactly how the newly discovered negative ions will be put to use. However, because of their high reactivity, Dye believes they may possibly be used in more ways than the positive ion, which does not react with other elements.

Though he has high hopes for the negative sodium ion, Dye said he doubts whether it will provide any practical usage until it can be produced inexpensively. He is currently experimenting with cheaper and quicker methods to produce the material. It costs $5,600 per ounce and takes several months to make.

Dye started his experimentation in 1969. It was during that period that he began detecting a trace of sodium negative in certain solutions. In 1972, he and a research group of three graduate assistants began seriously seeking the solution necessary to produce sodium negative ions.

"Instead of stumbling onto the material, we designed the conditions to produce this material," he said.

A little more than a year ago, when the efforts of the group finally paid off, it was an indescribable event, Dye said.

"We could see the gold crystals, and I guess it was kind of a feeling of elation more than anything else," he said.

"You have this feeling that you know something is happening, and that is the high point," he added. "From then on you work and work to prove it."

"After it was publicized, it was actually old news to me."

Dye, who grew up in the middle of nature in northern Minnesota where he became fascinated with chemicals, described his recent discovery as "probably the most spectacular thing" he has done so far.

A chemistry and math graduate from Gustavus Adolphus College, Dye later received a doctorate from Iowa State. The same year, 1953, he came directly to MSU and became an assistant professor.

From there Dye has worked himself up to enjoy a number of accomplishments, because as he put it, "We keep discovering new things all the time."

Negative sodium ions are not exactly the most common discovery he said, and since they are unexpected, they have created quite a bit of interest from the chemistry community.

Dye explained that the new material must always be kept in closed places because it reacts to most elements, including air, if exposed to them. Once combined with air, sodium nitrate begins to turn into a white, powdery substance. Under high temperatures, the ions decompose.

Basically, these reactions are generated by the negative sodium ions' urge to pass their electrons to other substances. Electrons are the fundamental particles composing matter. By distributing them to other substances, negative sodium ions become positive.

James Dye, MSU chemistry professor, demonstrates how he produces negative sodium ions, the result of a project that he has been involved with since 1969. It takes months to produce an ounce of the material at a cost of about $6,000.

HRP just beginning 'fight'

By JOHN TINGWALL

State News Staff Writer

Though Human Rights Party (HRP) gubernatorial candidate Ferency garnered a "disappointing" one per cent of the statewide vote in Tuesday's election, Ferency and the HRP gang definitely not ready to fold up their tents and leave town.

With a heartening 17 per cent of MSU student support in the gubernatorial race, Ferency said Wednesday he and other party members are just beginning to wage an uphill battle.

"We're encouraged by the fact that we survived two straight elections," Ferency said. "For only being around for four years, say we're doing quite well."

Only one HRP candidate finished better than third in local races. Mary Ellen Karczewski, candidate for 10th District Ingham County Commissioner, finished second to victorious Democrat Richard Conlin, leading her Republican opponent almost 2 to 1. In Washtenaw County, including University of Michigan and Eastern Michigan University, student support failed to lift HRP candidates above a third place spot.

"Our problem was trying to reach the entire state of Michigan $3,000," Ferency said. "On the MSU campus, however, the money we got was exactly what we were after."

Ferency said he noticed many of the HRP votes come from younger, first-time voters. But East Lansing precinct totals show real strongholds were in off-campus student ghetto precincts rather than among on-campus younger voters.

"To a large degree, we stole no votes," Ferency said. "Our support came from voters with no ties to the two established parties."

The 1 per cent support for the HRP enables it to appear on the statewide general election ballot, without petitioning for a name on the ballot.

A 5 per cent statewide showing, which Ferency hoped for, would have allowed the HRP to participate in state primaries. With the percentage of support they received, the HRP and other minor parties must nominate their candidates by party convention or caucus.

The next step for the HRP, Ferency said, will be to concentrate on local races and issues.

"We'll plunge into Ann Arbor in the next few months and try to initiate some local ballot proposals," Ferency said.

Other HRP candidates, along with Ferency, declined to comment on the possibility of running for office again.

"My plans depend on the direction the party takes," Howard Jones, HRP candidate for the 6th District congressional seat, said. Jones lost to Robert Carr, receiving six per cent of the MSU vote.

Some of us are considering putting much more energy into propositions like rent control in East Lansing," Jones said.

He said an elected rent control tenant board would probably be one immediate proposition HRP members will advocate.

Karczewski, encouraged by her strong showing, said she would devote as much energy to her party in the future as she has during the campaign.

"Besides rent-control, we'll probably attempt to get city council members elected on a partisan ballot in the wards," Karczewski said.

City council members are currently elected on a nonpartisan general election ballot.

John Fishbeck, HRP candidate for the 24th District Senate race, said his showing of less than 2 per cent would not discourage his support and enthusiasm for the party.

"I won't quit," Fishbeck said. "In fact, I'll run again. A lot of people were glad to hear me speaking alternatives."

State officials begin groundwork to delay possible tax increase

DETROIT (UPI) - Now that the election is behind us, many voters probably suspect that the first order of business out of Lansing will be a tax increase.

It has happened before - remember how state income taxes nearly doubled following the last gubernatorial election in 1970 - but any such action in the coming year is likely to be forestalled until there is no other way out.

To delay a tax hike for as long as possible, state officials already are laying the groundwork for a drastic belt-tightening in the executive branch.

For example, fiscal experts already are considering a 1.5 per cent across the board cut in the current state budget, with possibly greater reductions in high spending areas such as welfare. These steps, even though they are still on the drawing board, have state employe organizations quaking.

After the legislature approved a $15.2 million interim pay increase for civil service workers to take effect Dec. 29, state department heads were instructed to absorb the cost of the hike by putting a freeze on hiring.

This directive came at a time when some departments, mental health and corrections among them, already were complaining of a manpower shortage.

But some veterans of bureaucratic wars of the state claim the state fiscal outlook is far brighter now than it was following the revenue-draining 1970 strike against General Motors that dragged on for a record 67 days.

VICTORY PARTIES' MOODS SHOW IRONIC TWIST

Carr backers glum; Taylor crowd jubilant

Carr

By CHRIS DANIELSON

State News Staff Writer

That if they gave a victory party and a winner never showed? More than 100 people found such a situation a little uncomfortable as they waited election results for their man, Bob Carr, to show up at his victory headquarters on Lansing's East Side.

Carr's race for the 6th District congressional seat against Republican Clifford Taylor was, as election commentator Walter Adams punned early Tuesday morning, a real cliffhanger. Though the Carr supporters were generous much of the night while watching TV reports of the Democratic race, there was an undertone of nervousness extending into the wee hours of morning.

At 11:45 p.m. one of Carr's staunchest supporters asked a campaign aide, "How is everybody's so down in the mood?" Though the questioner was sure that "Carr's still going to win," hope often lacked conviction. It was noted like a proverb all night.

Carr's party started out cheerful enough. As two black and white TVs and out election returns, the beer and food crowd maintained a dull roar, talking about the latest Democratic victory in the national races. Though the squad in hall (UAW Local 724) was never packed, the crowd swelled to 100 people during the night.

Meanwhile, more than 200 Ingham County Democrats cleaned up a 20-foot long table while watching Walter Adams on four TVs in UAW Local 652's hall. The county's party was more ecstatic about Carr's, due to either the food and the split-level surroundings or to the anxiety which plagued the Carr camp.

Across a parking lot at Carr's party, a full crowd watched the Carr-Taylor race seewaw into the early morning hours, with the TV results occasionally contradictory. Before midnight, a victory was brought up to the speaker's podium, but it remained there uncut in quest of honor's absence. No Carr

A supporter of victorious congressional candidate Democrat Bob Carr watches TV election results during the long election eve wait for the announcement of a winner in the close 6th District race.

Taylor vote totals were available except those on TV, amid reports that Carr's vote tabulation center in downtown Lansing had broken down.

And so everyone waited. "Where is Carr?" was the $64,000 question.

Speculations varied.

"Carr is downtown. Carr is in Jackson. Carr is in Timbukto."

At 12:30 a.m. the TV report that Carr was leading Taylor by almost 3,000 votes drew a cheer from one supporter.

Taylor

By JEFF MERRELL

State News Staff Writer

In the front room of Cliff Taylor's campaign headquarters, there were periodic cries of jubilation as the television announcer told of Taylor's early leads.

But in the back, where the tabulation of votes were hours ahead of what the people up front were eagerly accepting, the faces were expressionless.

The vote was close, but Taylor was losing. Nobody could tell what was going to happen.

"It's hard to say what's going to happen," Taylor said. "Some things are going well, some not so well." Taylor had just been informed that he had lost Jackson County, which he had expected to win by a slight margin.

But Taylor was also doing better in Lansing than had been anticipated.

"I honestly wish I could tell you what is going to happen, one way or the other, but I can't," Spencer Abraham, Taylor's campaign manager, said.

More votes would soon come in, and the situation still remained "iffy" in the back room.

The front room, however, yelled in ecstasy once more as the television returns, still hours behind, told of Taylor's lead.

Someone even said Walter Cronkite projected Taylor as the winner.

"I'm not sure how accurate that is," Taylor said.

And in East Lansing, where incumbent Republican Congressman Charles Chamberlain had received a very low percentage against Carr in 1972, Taylor did much better than had been estimated.

"Chamberlain ran 12 per cent of the vote on campus. We hope to do considerably better than that," Taylor said.

New returns from the campus area of East Lansing showed Taylor received 30 per cent of the vote, which was good, but only 60 per cent of the number of voters that turned out in the last election voted in this one, which was bad. Facial expressions remained unchanged.

Abraham then projected that the election would be decided by about 2,000 votes, either way. An hour later, he changed that to 1,000 votes.

At 3 a.m., Taylor was still behind, but nobody would admit defeat. Taylor said if he were to close the lead that Carr held, he expected to do it in the out-county areas, which were yet to come in.

At 4 a.m., Abraham announced that Taylor would fall about 700 to 1,000 votes short, but would not yet call it a concession.

Losing Republican congressional candidate Cliff Taylor speaks in a phone interview on election eve. Results of the closely contested race were not known definitively until the wee hours of Wednesday morning.

State vote variegated

The first thing that can be said about Michigan voting results — both statewide and here at MSU — is that things came out mixed.

Look at the statewide outcome. For the GOP, the election left Michigan as one of the few large states with a Republican governor. The Milliken - Levin race was a replay of the 1970 statehouse sweepstakes, and once again Milliken found incumbency a plus in staving off Levin's challenge.

Milliken now has a chance to fight the twin plagues of inflation and unemployment, between which tens of thousands of Michigan auto workers are currently reeling. Milliken's political future will largely depend on his ability to combat these ills.

However, the Democrats were not left out of the running. They picked up two congressional seats to increase their present majority in the Michigan delegation to Washington, as well as retaining the two seats won from Republicans in special elections held earlier this year. Democrats also captured the attorney general and secretary of state posts, plus most of the other statewide races.

In the East Lansing area's predominantly student precincts the returns were also mixed. On the one hand, many students seemed to favor a radical change from the status quo. More than 17 per cent of these voters cast their gubernatorial vote for Human Rights party candidate Zolton Ferency, compared to a statewide Ferency vote of just 1 per cent.

On the other hand, incumbent Milliken swept up 43 per cent of the student vote. And despite the much heralded "Democratic sweep," one-time loser Bob Carr actually lost ground to his Republican opposition in student precincts. This happened in face of the fact that Carr had been campaigning for his hard-won 6th District congressional seat for three years.

Cliff Taylor has proved that a local Republican can garner student votes, even in the face of long odds. Carr will have to perform wonders if he is to avoid another cliffhanger come 1976.

Perhaps the most disheartening aspect of the student returns is that under 50 per cent of the students registered in East Lansing didn't vote. Such apathy is unlikely to produce a government with real concern for the people.

Burden now on Dems

There's talk of a mandate in the air again, but this time it is Democrats such as House Speaker Carl Albert claiming victory.

In every region of the country, voters expressed an unmistakable desire for new leadership — for Democratic leadership, for congressional leadership.

President Ford acknowledged the Democratic sweep by promising to "work with" the Congress. Significantly, he did not ask the Democratic Congress to work with him. Republican House Minority Leader John Rhodes went even further, challenging the congressional Democrats to construct their own, original legislative program.

With 292 House seats — more than that needed for a potentially "veto-proof" House — and 61 Senate seats, Democrats in Congress gained the power they needed to justify the American people's faith, in their party as the one best able to solve the country's economic ills by a five to two margin at the polls.

But we have seen mandates before. Overwhelming victories have a peculiar tendency to disintegrate through dissension and arrogance.

The silver lining in the Republican's massive cloud is that the onus is now on the Democrats to solve a horrendous economic problem that may be virtually impossible to solve.

The beneficiaries of Tuesday's mandate, then, would do well to beware. Now is too crucial a time for the Democratic party to indulge in internal squabbling or grandstanding aimed at 1976.

Gerald Ford has proven himself a man who knows how to cooperate. The Congress must show a complimentary spirit of reconciliation if it is to produce genuine solutions.

Some indication of the degree of internal harmony of the Democratic party may come with the off-year convention this December in Kansas City.

Only the next two years can show whether the Democrats can meet the other challenge, to legislate wisely and cooperatively with a Republican President.

Arrogance combined with the lust for power — so recently destructive of the Nixon "mandate" — must not betray the will of the people again.

Nixon appreciated abroad

PARIS — The Republican party, in the current U.S. elections, had to pay a large price because of Richard Nixon. He seemed to understand the world much better than his own country and his leadership talents were therefore more appreciated abroad than at home. Foreigners don't vote in the United States.

Americans were horrified by the immorality and ethical aberrations exposed in the Watergate scandal. Nevertheless, a medley of foreign leaders, ranging from Chou En-Lai to Georges Pompidou and from King Faisal of Saudi Arabia to Golda Meir, worried as a president they respected began tottering.

While Nixon was appointing to high White House positions a bunch of small-town, middle-class fixers with no apparent sense of national dignity, he was also naming as his diplomatic right-hand Henry Kissinger, a respected, knowledgeable Harvard professor who had opposed his politics and was wholly removed from the locker-room society of his Pennsylvania Avenue clubmates.

The former president had patiently set about making himself an expert on international matters because he recognized in them his country's major concern. Hubert Humphrey, who was to oppose him in the presidential race in 1968, told me in 1967: "Nixon will be a very strong contender... he knows that foreign policy is the issue of our day."

Such perspicience paid off. Kissinger explained (while he was still national security adviser in the White House) just how he worked with the president. It was plain that Nixon remained both architect and decision maker in U.S. policy until his position became eroded.

According to Kissinger: "The President required a complete spectrum of analyses and recommendations on any subject — and then he wanted to make his decision. This was his operational system. Nixon wanted to be sure that every option was covered and fully explained — he would study them and choose."

Kissinger saw Nixon's job as making the final choice after every possible view had been heard. Kissinger was not expected to favor one or another line, merely to present them all with approximately equal impartiality; and there had to be a full, written record of the process. Those who saw him as 'a Machiavelli' were silly, he contended. His function was to present equally the opinions he favored and disfavored.

Another time Kissinger said: "He (Nixon) feels very strongly that he must avoid being surprised by something he could have foreseen. All possible results of any given line must be examined." And this remained Kissinger's principal function until the President started to use him as his secret personal emissary on super-negotiations — with North Vietnam, China and Russia.

Nixon himself once described his concept to me as "the specific purpose of maintaining a U.S. policy role in the world rather than a withdrawal from the world and international responsibilities..."

"It is not enough just to be for peace. The point is, what can we do about it? Through an accident of history we find ourselves today in a situation where no one who is really for peace in this country can reject an American role in the rest of the world..."

"Our idea is to create a situation in those lands to which we have obligations or in which we have interests where, if they are ready to fight a fire, they should be able to count on us to furnish the hose and water..."

"We must not forget our alliances or our interests. Other nations must know that the United States has both the capability and the will to defend these allies and protect these interests..."

"For the next 25 years the United States is destined to play this superpower role as both an economic and a nuclear giant. We just have to do this. We cannot dodge our responsibilities... We could become a terrible threat to the world if we were to lose our restraint or if we were to sacrifice our own power and allow ourselves to become too weak to uphold the weak."

It is one of the tragedies of American history that the man who so clearly discerned a proper relationship between the United States and other nations should have paid so little heed to the moral quality of U.S. national needs and the men selected to face them. This split judgment ultimately destroyed Nixon — as it damaged his party at the polls. It did not blemish his foreign policy.

U.S. propaganda augurs oil war

By DENIS HOPPE

For over a month now, the American people have been inundated with a mass of propaganda in the press and on television blaming domestic inflation on the oil-producing nations — particularly the oil-producing nations in the Middle East. Even though less than 15 per cent of total U.S. oil consumption comes from the Middle East, "the Arabs" in general are being blamed for over 50 per cent of domestic inflation. President Ford has threatened to take harsh measures against the oil-producing countries if they do not lower the price of crude oil.

Addressing the World Energy Conference in Detroit Sept. 23, Ford stated, "Sovereign nations cannot allow their policies to be dictated, or their fate decided, by artificial rigging and distortion of world commodity markets... exorbitant prices can only distort the world economy, run the risk of worldwide depression and threaten the breakdown of world order and safety. Throughout history, nations have gone to war over natural advantages such as water or food, or convenient passages on land or sea."

A few days after this veiled threat of U.S. military intervention against oil-producing nations, Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger called a news conference to declare in behalf of the Pentagon that "we are not contemplating any kind of action of that sort." But Schlesinger carefully noted that "the United States regard the problem of oil prices as detrimental to world economy."

"We expect to have a solution through negotiations, through amicable discussions. It is not anticipated that there is going to be a military conflict," Schlesinger added.

This denial of war intentions in itself constituted a trial balloon. Although the New York Times reported that Schlesinger was "ruling out military intervention," the war minister was actually repeating the stock refrain about peaceful aims that every government leader makes in preparing public opinion for belligerent action.

During the past month, every political pundit of the American establishment press, both liberal and conservative, has eagerly followed up on President Ford's attempt to blame inflation on rising Arab oil prices. Politicians even of the most liberal stripe, like Ramsey Clark in New York, have joined Ford and Kissinger's saber-rattling campaign to blame the Arab nations for inflation instead of putting the blame where it belongs — on U.S. oil and agribusiness corporations and the U.S. government.

In an Oct. 6 debate with Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., Clark denounced the Arab nations as "pirates and tyrants" and called for both a boycott of Middle East oil and an unequivocal U.S. commitment "to provide Israel the invincible armament that will deter any attack." These belligerent statements from a so-called antiwar liberal were typical of many others, not only from Democratic and Republican politicians, but from editorial writers as well.

Right on cue, as usual, the Israeli army in the Middle East has been stepping up its active preparations for war against the Arab countries. The past two months have been punctuated by one Israeli provocation after another. The Israeli army has conducted full-scale mobilizations and massive military maneuvers menacingly close to the cease-fire line, both in Sinai and on Israel's northern front. Air attacks, shelling and ground raids against Lebanese villages have occurred almost daily in this period.

American arms deliveries to Israel are increasing. On Oct. 3, the New York Times reported that "Israeli Premier

Sugar makes sweet profits

Life is sweet these days in the sugar business. Prices have gone up 300 per cent in the past year and profits are rising apace.

Net income for Amstar, formerly the American Sugar Company, is up 250 per cent. Great Western United, the biggest beet-sugar refiner, is up 1,120 per cent in net income, and another boost in prices is due at your supermarket next week.

It is a thrilling success story at a time when the general economy is not so stable, flat and unprofitable, but also in rotten shape. So, in response to the public outcry for less gloomy news and more roses, I sought to meet the man behind the miracle.

He is, of course, the Big Sugar Daddy of the United States.

"You may have an audience in a few moments along with this gentleman here," his secretary said.

"Do you know who I am?" the gentleman asked the secretary.

"Of course," the secretary said. "You are the Oil King of the Western World. Now behave yourself or we'll print a icing right off your cake."

"The Oil King himself!" I marveled. "Waiting on the Big Sugar Daddy? You're the only other man in America who's raking in exorbitant profits while the rest of us are losing theirs."

"Button your lip," said the King. "I'll squeeze you for another 2 cents a gallon."

"Gentlemen, the Big Sugar Daddy of the United States!" cried the secretary, who stood up.

"Be seated," he said, and wept. "Those are crocodile tears," whispered the Oil King.

"How do you know?"

"Because he's stolen my crocodile!"

"Your crocodile?"

"Of course. In big business you've got to have a crocodile to supply you with crocodile tears to weep every time you raise prices to ever more fantastic heights. Those tears mean he's going to raise his prices again."

"I have only one announcement to make," wept the Big Sugar Daddy.

"I regret that intolerable economic hardship compels me to increase the price of sugar by 4 cents effective as of this instant."

"Mr. Daddy," I cried.

"Call me Your Sweetness," he sobbed. "Will you tell me, Your Sweetness, a secret which has enabled you to make fantastic profits while almost everybody else is losing theirs?"

He was convulsed in tears. "Oh no, no, managed at last. 'Not fantastic profits, my lad. The figures may look startling to the uninformed, but when you consider the depressed profits base of previous years when your poor old Big Sugar Daddy was making nothing at all — nothing at all — He was weeping so intensely he could not continue, and I edged out.

Planthouse needed

I have been surprised to note only one reaction to the administration's plan to build a Performing Arts Center. This was in the State News Oct. 28 and was negative in nature. I fully agree with the administration that this center is a worthwhile project, but I also agree with the writer of the letter that its construction would be almost an exercise in futility.

Two objections to the present Auditorium are that its acoustics are bad and that it has too small a seating capacity. To build a center which has good acoustics and a smaller seating capacity is hardly solving the whole problem. A more sensible solution would be to wait until sufficient funds are available to do the job correctly.

Personally, I would rather see the administration push for the construction of a large conservatory or House of Plants, the plans for which are already in the proper campus offices. We do not have such a facility now, and it would be a pleasurable, useful building serving thousands of people each year.

Fans hoard roads

I feel particularly qualified to respond to Rita Gilbert's claims Oct. 29 about football traffic in other cities, since I have lived five "sheltered" years in Ann Arbor and four "sheltered" years in Pasadena. I must contradict her and report that those cities are not "taken over" on football days. I had to come to East Lansing to find that absurd approach to traffic control.

Those of us not attending the game are not objecting to heavy traffic, but rather we object to being told that to facilitate traffic flow we may not drive to our homes. Personally I do not even expect to be able to use the shortest route, but if that route is closed, is it asking too much that the officers present be briefed and be able to direct me to an alternate route?

The day of the Pig-Freak game, four or five officers mistakenly told me that it was impossible to reach my home. I eventually happened upon the open route. Well-informed officers could have directed me to it more quickly, and hence could have gotten me out of the way of the football hoard.

ELECTION RESULTS YIELD FEW SURPRISES

Voters show vengeance by purging GOP

By JAMES R. DICKENSON
Washington Star News

WASHINGTON — For Republicans the 1974 elections were like a hostile and savage jungle in which only the strongest and wildest survive. There were few surprises Tuesday. The Republican losses were within the expected boundaries. The anti-Republican tide flowed relentlessly against the GOP, exposing nearly every Republican weakness as a fatal one. Thus, many Republican opportunities were lost. In normal times they might have captured Birch Bayh's Senate seat in Indiana and not allowed the Democrats to win George Aiken's Republican Senate seat in Vermont for the first time since the Civil War.

Republican survivors were generally in two categories. There were those who had the foresight to disassociate themselves early on from the Watergate scandals and the domestic policies of the Nixon administration and had the personal political strength to hang on. And there were those who overcame with sheer energy, skill, and guts.

In the first category were such Republicans, primarily party liberals and moderates, as Sens. Jacob K. Javits of New York, Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania, Charles Mathias of Maryland and Robert Packwood of Oregon, and Gov. Robert Ray of Iowa.

In the second category were Republicans like Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, Gov. William Milliken of Michigan, and former governor James Rhodes of Ohio.

Analysis

For Republican office seekers this year, the most perilous parts of the political jungle were areas where normally they feel right at home. But these are areas in which the natives now are enraged — the betrayal of Watergate, the economy, and the general sense that things are getting worse with neither Democrat nor Republican able to do much about it.

There was a general, across-the-board vengeance vote against the Republicans, nationwide, except for most of the South and Southwest where Watergate had the least impact. Republicans lost heavily in the farm belt, in such normally hospitable states as Iowa and Indiana where their congressional candidates narrowly escaped being turned out into the cold altogether.

They lost in normally Republican areas in New Jersey and California. They suffered reverses in the mountain states, which heretofore have been conservative bastions but are turning. They saw recent gains in the border states of Tennessee and Kentucky wiped out.

In some places Republican gains and Democratic losses were the result of freak circumstances. Republican James Edwards won the governor's race in South Carolina partly through a good campaign but primarily because of Democratic disarray after Charles Ravenel, the winner of the primary election, was disqualified because he failed to meet residency requirements.

In Maine the Democrats lost a statehouse they had a good chance of holding because independent James Longly, who ran as an anti-politics candidate, sneaked up on both major parties.

In many cases the Republican attrition in the 1974 jungle was the result of a sort of political Darwinism in which many of the party's strongest potential candidates foresaw the disaster and let the weaker run and endure the slaughter.

Many of the fatal wounds were self-inflicted. Sen. Peter Dominick of Colorado didn't read the perils of Watergate and Nixonomics as clearly as Dole, his Kansas neighbor. Republican House members proved vulnerable, particularly if they stuck by Richard M. Nixon to the end.

The Republican members of the House Judiciary Committee who supported Nixon proved particularly vulnerable. Four who voted against impeachment were defeated and one who voted for it, Harold Froehlich of Wisconsin, lost.

The anticipated lineup of the 94th Congress — 62 Democrats and 36 Republicans (with two independents who generally vote Republican) and 291 Democrats and 144 Republicans in the House — would be the second largest imbalance between the parties since World War II. After the 1964 debacle the lineup was 295 to 140 in the House and 67 to 33 in the Senate; after Franklin Roosevelt's 1936 landslide the Democrats outnumbered the Republicans 333 to 98 and 75 to 17.

Dems incur burden of economic ills

By CARL R. LEUBSDORF
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrats have used political weaponry for their 1976 House challenge, but also have incurred the burden of dealing with the nation's economic ills.

The same off-year election victories that tightened their grip on Congress and nation's biggest states confronted Democrats with a situation in which they now produce on the pivotal issues of inflation and recession.

Otherwise, they face a 1976 presidential race against a President Ford sounding the "do-nothing Congress" theme that carried President Harry S. Truman to victory in 1948.

From National Chairman Robert S. Strauss down, Democratic leaders declared that Tuesday's mandate provides an opportunity for national leadership in key areas, primarily in dealing with the country's economic crisis.

Analysis

"The opportunity begins tonight,"

Strauss told celebrating Democrats at party headquarters.

But Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., the 1972 Democratic presidential candidate, and Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., who hopes to be the next standard-bearer, warned of a 1976 backlash if Democrats fail to produce.

Some Republicans seemed inclined to give the Democrats a chance to show what — or if — they could produce. "The ball is in their court," House Republican Leader John J. Rhodes said.

The burden of producing may fall most heavily on the heretofore disorganized House Democrats with aggressive liberals within the party's caucus seeking to take the lead.

Whatever degree of success he achieves, however, few expect the House, despite the Democratic two-thirds majority, to become the "veto-proof" body against which Ford had campaigned.

In fact, the Senate, with a somewhat smaller Democratic percentage, may pose an even greater threat to the President since about 10 Republican liberals generally support the Democrats.

But the problems faced by Democrats, with their new riches, are more than matched by those of President Ford. He heads into the final two years of his presidential term with the weakest Republican party in a decade.

Both organizationally and ideologically, Ford faces difficulties in gearing up for a 1976 presidential race his aides still see as possible.

On the policy side, Ford will be confronted with a more aggressively liberal Congress when his own party's conservatives say he is abandoning the 1972 Republican mandate and moving to the left.

The most notable spokesman for this view is outgoing California Gov. Ronald Reagan, preferred by many Republican leaders in the South as the party's next presidential candidate.

At the same time, the pressure on Ford from the left is coming from within GOP ranks, as well as from the Democrats.

Most GOP moderates were re-elected Tuesday, while conservatives were generally the losers.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., a GOP moderate who had been gearing up for a 1976 presidential bid before Richard M. Nixon resigned, warned anew that Republicans must broaden their appeal, or face permanent minority status.

Cesar Chavez' daughter to address campus rally

Attempting to consolidate their power, the United Farm Workers (UFW) has once again taken to the road to garner student and popular support.

Linda Chavez, daughter of Cesar Chavez, will speak in a rally at 3 p.m. at Mount Tower along with Sam Baca, UFW Michigan coordinator.

Along with Chavez and Baca will be a striking farm worker family from California who will talk about union struggles there. People present will be able to ask the family questions about the situation.

The main topic will be an effort to get nonunion produce off the MSU campus. Currently MSU uses 400 cases of nonunion lettuce a week.

Chavez has always leaned heavily on the support from college students.

An example of the zeal with which campus supporters attach themselves to "la causa" was demonstrated recently at the University of Minnesota. There one student led a referendum on whether to boycott lettuce and grapes in support of the UFW.

At MSU a student boycott has cut down the demand for grapes considerably in dining halls. Refusing to buy Gallo wine has dropped sales of that product 40 to 60 percent in area stores.

Though the UFW is succeeding in some areas of the country they appear to be ground in others. According to union leaders, the number of members has dropped drastically and the Teamsters Union is moving in to take over.

In case of rain, the rally will be moved to 326 Natural Science Bldg.

Austin overwhelms rival in secretary of state race

DETROIT (UPI) — There was never any question among the political pros that Richard H. Austin would win re-election. Only the size of his victory was uncertain.

It was a landslide — as expected. By 4 a.m., the 58-year-old Democrat was leading with 905,909 votes to 371,621 for his Republican opponent, N. Lorraine Beebe, in the secretary of state race.

Beebe did not even bother turning up at the GOP election night watch at a Detroit hotel. She stayed home to hear the bad news.

The win was even bigger than the one Austin won four years ago. He defeated his Republican opponent then by more than 300,000 votes.

This time, Austin and Beebe, 56, the first woman to win either major party's nomination for a state office, waged strictly low profile campaigns.

There were no issues, no personality clashes.

Beebe did gain some publicity with her travels through the Upper Peninsula. The campaign jaunt took six days and ended with her spending $132 and raising $67 plus free lodgings.

Austin, on the other hand, spent perhaps $40,000 but he did not devote full time to campaigning.

Austin, 61, cited his contributions, which he described as innovations such as license plates by mail and applications by mail for drivers' licenses.

Beebe was fairly well known before the campaign. She was the center of some controversy as executive director of the state Consumers Council, position she resigned under alleged pressure from Gov. Milliken.

Austin, reportedly the black certified public accountant in Michigan, narrowly defeated by S. Gribbs in the Detroit mayor's race in 1969.

As secretary of state, he heads a department of 2,000 employees who issue auto drivers' licenses, oversee elections, register boats and snowmobiles and handle license appeals.

He also is second in line of succession as governor.

Four Dems retain House seats won earlier in special elections

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats have held onto four of the five House seats they won earlier this year in special elections, including the Michigan seat formerly held by President Ford.

The Republicans managed to keep the one district they won in a special election earlier in the year.

Despite personal campaigning by Ford in the district he represented for 25 years, Michigan's 5th District voters re-elected Democrat Richard VanderVeen over his GOP challenger, Paul Goebel.

In Michigan's 8th District, Democrat Robert Traxler won again over Republican James Sparling in a rematch of their race last April.

In Pennsylvania's 12th District, Democrat John

Murtha won over Republican Harry Fox, a former aide to Rep. John Saylor, R - Pa., whose death opened up the seat. Murtha also defeated Fox in February in the special election to fill Saylor's unexpired term.

Democrat John L. Burton, who won a special California election in an upset in June, retained his House post Tuesday in a somewhat different district in the San Francisco Bay area.

The only Republican to win one of the 1974 special elections, Robert J. Lagomarsino, held his seat in Tuesday's voting in the 19th California District. He defeated Democrat James Leob, the Ojai mayor.

The only Democrat who won one of the special elections and lost Tuesday was Thomas Luken of Cincinnati.

Stan Kenton & his Orchestra

After thirty-two years of travelling with just about every format into which the jazz orchestra can be expanded, STAN KENTON returns a 19 piece unit that is one of the most cohesive and best balanced ensembles in Kenton history. It's young, airy and free.

The flash, the flair, the serious thrust of the Kenton sound has more than survived, it has conquered the big band decline to become classic. There's vintage Kenton jazz, there's contemporary jazz, as well as contemporary ballads, which engulf the concertgoer with a sense of shared loneliness. Which is exactly what great jazz — and Kenton's music is all about.

Lessard weary; Jondahl celebrates win

By G. F. KORRECK
State News Staff Writer

For Lynn Jondahl, it was a night to remember. For Cathy Lessard it was one perhaps better forgotten, with an indefinite time to try again.
Jondahl, a Democrat, had just retained the 59th District state representative seat he won in 1972, and he did so in a convincing margin.
The final tally was 21,145 for Jondahl, 10,349 for Republican Lessard and 1,037 for Human Rights party candidate Carroll Kins. Jondahl captured 65 per cent of the vote to Lessard's 33 per cent.
It was a sharp contrast from the 1972 race between Jondahl and Republican James Pocock, which Jondahl won by a bare six percentage points and needed 63 per cent of the student vote to through.
"I'm amazed," Fred Kennedy, Lessard's campaign manager said, as the clock pushed toward 2 a.m. Wednesday. "I just don't understand."

There was little to understand.
Explanations and analysis could come later, but for the 20 to 30 friends and supporters at Lessard headquarters the question had already been answered.
By 1 a.m. the outside word was harshly negative, as Lessard's supporters filed into the room on M.A.C. Avenue that had once housed a tintype photography studio, the unsuccessful Nelson-Brown city council campaign and currently, the Fred Astaire Dance Studio.
They watched Cathy Lessard dance alone, fighting back emotions that had built up during the campaign and wondering how she could have lost by so wide a margin.
"I don't really know what to say until I've seen the precinct totals," she said wearily. "I can't take it as a personal affront but I don't see how I could have lost so badly with Milliken in and Taylor winning."

Her grandparents were there until the end, quietly watching returns and following Pete Stevens — who worked on state rep. Colleen House's R-Bay City, successful campaign in the spring — and Cathy into the small office lined with telephones.
Lessard and Stevens handled many of the calls and Kennedy complained late in the evening that he was not able to get returns as quickly as radio and television. He denied defeat to the very end.
"Hell no, we're not conceding," he said near 2 a.m. Wednesday. "We don't have enough information yet."
Meanwhile, Lessard's supporters offered condolences. A back room that had been decorated by area grade-schoolers sat empty, as it had most of the night, as a sad reminder.
Across town, at the Pebble Creek housing complex, Democrats were whooping it up.
The bar was crowded, the floor was crowded and people were making enough noise to wake a county.
Shouts came from those watching one of three televisions broadcasting national and local returns. Smiles came from some who sat in corners, leafing through a Jondahl for state rep scrapbook. A few people just got drunk.
Jondahl and campaign manager Ann Silverman seemed to take the victory in stride.
Jondahl said he was not surprised with the low student turnout. He believed those who did vote were more informed than in past years.
"They're more cynical, they asked hard questions," he said of his 1974 canvassing experience.
Silverman said the election was never in doubt, and that only the margin of victory needed to be decided.
Democratic candidates for county commissioner popped in during the evening with party progress reports and the only undry eyes in the place were those of a young woman who was certain Bob Carr was going to lose.
At Lessard headquarters, there was some speculation on party support but many of the people there were more concerned for their candidate and what they thought was missing from the campaign.
But the speculation is over.
For now, each side can only put the pieces together and figure out what worked and what did not. It will be more painful for Lessard, who tried hard not to take the loss personally and said she might want to try again.
"You're a good girl; Cathy. You're a good girl," supporters told her as they left.

Album shows Rundgren's style evolution

By DAVE DIMARTINO
State News Reviewer
Progressive rock has come a long way since the Blues Magoos, but three recently released albums raise questions about the usefulness of the term.

It is inconceivable that these three records can be placed under the same label of progressive rock.

TODD RUNDGREN'S UTOPIA
Todd Rundgren is well known in the music business as a performer, composer, producer, arranger and engineer. His albums, from his teenage jazz escapades right through "Todd," clearly document a musical evolution that is little short of remarkable.

RUNDGREN
The garbled wastes that marred much of "Todd" (wastes in the form of simplistic electronic doodlings that grew tiring with repeated listening) have been refined and reserved, in the form of "Todd Rundgren's Utopia."

Rundgren and his crew are playing high-energy music straight from the Mahavishnu mold. Surprisingly, much of the material is quite good. Rundgren's usual tendency is to compose instrumental music that is reminiscent of melodramatic movie soundtracks. He seems a bit more disciplined now and thus more listenable.

Incidentally, Boston-based synthesizer maestro Roger Powell (who produced the so-so "Cosmic Furnace" album a year ago) has very recently joined Utopia. With Jean Yves Labat, already a member of the Rundgren troupe and a synthesizer whiz in his own right, Utopia's dual synthesizer players might give the band cosmic potential.

MAGMA - "KOHNTARKOSZ"
This album, pure and simply, is a masterpiece. Magma has released one album in America previously, "Mekanik Destrktiv Kommandoh" which was, shall we say, inaccessible to all but those few with truly bizarre tastes.

A French group, Magma writes and performs in their own language, Kobaian. Thus, there are a few language difficulties inherent in appreciating this European music, as no one but the group has any idea what all the lyrics mean.

But it is the music that is all-important. Sounding like a series of repetitive funeral dirges, each of the compositions on "Kohntarkosz" borders on near genius. The music is all almost fatally oppressive. It shouts, repeats monotonously and is always awesome in its intensity.

Influenced by the German composer Carl Orff (whose "Carmen Burana" was recently used here by the Alvin Ailey Dance Group), Magma has produced a surging, original music form that few groups can imitate in style or sheer power.

The eight-track version of this album is not recommended. HATFIELD AND THE NORTH
This album is another excellent product of Virgin records, the folks who brought America Mike Oldfield and Tangerine Dream.

A combination of four musical styles, integrated into one extremely enjoyable whole, make up the bulk of Hatfield's music. The four group members, Dave Stewart (ex-Egg), Richard Sinclair (ex-Caravan), Phil Miller (ex-Matching Mole) and Pip Pyle (ex-Gong), all compose. Due to their different backgrounds, each respective composition sounds much like the work of the composer's original group. Stewart, a phenomenal keyboardist, dominates most of the proceedings. His presence in the music world since Egg's demise has been sorely missed.

A highlight of the disc is the short vocal segment contributed by Robert Wyatt. The composition, called "Calyx," is written by Phil Miller, Wyatt's fellow Matching Mole ex-member. Wyatt's vocal is his first since the crippling accident he suffered last year.

an unfortunate occurrence which has placed him in a wheelchair for life. The three-minute vocal provides the most emotional moments on the entire album.

Wyatt's own album, by the way, will soon see American release. Called "Rock Bottom," it is, in this reviewer's opinion, the finest album of the year. Perhaps the very recent release of Wyatt's first-ever American album, a remake of "I'm A Believer," might pave the way for American acceptance he long deserved.

In the meantime, "Hatfield and the North" certainly is not slouch. Emotionally listenable, there are few great tracks that could have produced a debut album as impressive and entertaining as this.

prelude to a concert in London on Nov. 14 in connection with the release of the record.

Rose a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, is a winner of the International Busoni Competition in Italy.

At this concert Rose will play selections from the Liszt work and two pieces by Beethoven: "Six Bagatelles,

MSU Wind Ensemble blooms at Fairchild

The sound of blaring brass and trilling piccolos is not confined to the football field at halftime. Tuesday night the sound of the MSU Wind Ensemble presented the band concert of the season.

Library exhibits art from Victorian era

By PAT CLYDE

The social moods of Victorian England are mirrored through the art and literature of the era in one of November displays at the Library.

Most familiar of all are the original magazine illustrations by Aubrey Beardsley, an artist of the decadent 1890s.

Artifacts by Canadian and Alaskan Eskimos are exhibited this month on the third floor, approaching the Art Library.

Two of the carvings date back to 1900, but the rest date from 1960 as part of a growing response to European and North American markets.

Soapstone, ivory and caribou antler carvings by Eskimos of Alaska and the Northwest Territory are shown along with prints in the form of calendars and cards.

Eskimos have only worked in print since 1957, but they have adapted this new art form well to traditional subject matters.

A larger Eskimo art exhibit is in the basement of the MSU Museum. Some of the artifacts are on sale.

The Wind Ensemble showed improvement even over last year's great season. It had a big, full sound that filled the hall. Last year the group sounded almost timid.

Unfortunately the crowd was sparse, not even filling a third of Fairchild — a rather small place anyway. This would seem to indicate that bands do not have the attracting power that a symphony orchestra has. Hopefully this is not the case because the Wind Ensemble is only one of four fine groups of musicians in the Department of Bands.

Kenneth Bloomquist, MSU director of bands, led the brass and percussion in the opening piece by Copland, "Fanfare for the Common Man."

The Copland work is a difficult work for brass and there was an occasional crack as trumpets and horns reached for their notes. However, the magnificent simplicity of Copland's music shone through.

Bloomquist turned the rest of the evening over to guest conductor Guillermo Bonef Muller. Muller, a native of Argentina, has studied at MSU under a Fulbright scholarship. He is presently the conductor and musical director of the Chamber Orchestra of the Province of Formosa.

Muller has a definite chamber music style of conducting. He tries to bring out every single voice in the ensemble to achieve a clear sound. This is no easy task with a band where there are usually several musicians playing on a part.

Muller's first piece was Mendelssohn's "Overture for Band." He managed to get his clear tone despite some heavy scoring in the work, which tended to emphasize the woodwinds. In Mendelssohn's time most of the brass instruments had no valves, so the number of notes a brass instrument could play was limited.

A smaller group played Gounod's "Petite Symphonie in B Flat." It was performed well with some nice work by the flutes and oboes. The problem was in the length of the piece. There is only so much a composer can do with nine woodwinds, and Gounod was a conservative composer anyway. The work became tedious after a while.

The full band came back on stage for a work by the modern Argentine composer, Luis Gianneo, "El Tarco en Flor." This is a brilliant piece with a definite south-of-the-border sound. The Wind Ensemble proved here that a band can play music written in the impressionistic style.

The evening ended with "Soliloquy and Dance" by the MSU music department's chairman, James Niblock. It was an interesting work with a lot of brass and it showed an influence from Bernstein's music.

Bucks' power awesome from all angles

By PAT FARNAN
State News Sports Writer
Those incredible, powerful, haughty Ohio State Buckeyes will be in town this weekend looking to put the shackles on Denny Stolz's Spartans, who have different ideas.
But so have the Bucks other eight opponents. Stolz has even asked Spartan fans to dress in green and white for moral support.
Game time is 12:55 p.m. Saturday at Spartan Stadium.

Woody Hays' steamroller is the No. 1 ranked team in the country and with good reason. They have crunched everybody.
The OSU machine has scored touchdowns on 24 of its last 26 possessions. Its other two possessions failed because of fumbles, believe it or not.
The Bucks have more horses than all of the King's men, beginning with All-American tailback Archie Griffin, a prime Heisman trophy candidate, and ending with who knows what.

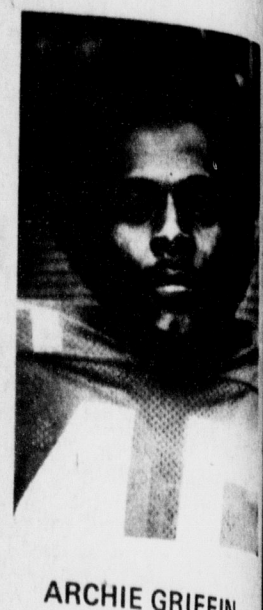

Griffin has left more yards of turf behind him than a professional sod cutter. He has surpassed the 100-yard mark in rushing the last 18 games he has played in.
Griffin has 3,638 yards to his credit right now. Barring unforeseen circumstances, he should eclipse Ed Marinaro's (Cornell) 4,715 NCAA mark sometime next year.
Then there is quarterback Cornelius Greene. The guy who supposedly could not pass is now throwing aerials at a 672 clip for nine touchdowns. Greene can run, too, as he demonstrated in last year's Rose Bowl. He was the MVP in that game and has not lost any of the luster from that performance.

Greene has 638 yards to his credit and runs the ball with an average of six yards per carry.
Tailback Brian Baschnagel seldom carries the football, but when he does, he makes it count. In 24 carries this fall, the versatile junior has averaged 12 yards a try. On the receiving end he averages over 13 yards a snag.

Remember Harold "Champ" Henson? He is still around. The leading scorer in the nation two years ago is still an important cog in the Bucks offense. Henson has crossed the goal line seven times for Ohio State this year and currently sports a five yards per carry average.
No longer do the Buckeyes restrict their offense to the ground. They have scored six times this fall through the air. Baschnagel, Mike Bartoszek and David Hazel do most of the pass catching for OSU.
The Buckeye's kicking game is quite impressive, too. Punter Tom Skladany, who seldom has to execute the chore, averages 47.4 a boot. Kicker Tom Klaban has converted "only" 44 of 45 extra points, but to err is human. Klaban can also be excused for hitting on only two or three field goal attempts because he seldom gets the chance to kick them.

Defensively, the Buckeyes are a hard team to assess. They have not had to do much this season. Nevertheless, they have allowed only 75 points to the opposition.
The Bucks lost a few key plugs in their defense this year with the graduation of Randy Gradishar, Vic Koegel and Rick Middleton.

But there is more where they came from.
Van DeCree, defensive left end, was an All-American last year. Neal Colzie is one of the top defensive backs in college football and he led the country in punt returns last year. Defensive tackle Pete Cusick was a Big Ten selection and second team All-American last year.
In addition, Bruce Elia, who shared fullback responsibilities last year, has been relegated to linebacker and currently leads the Bucks in tackles with 45 solos and 47 assists.

Dodger relief ace Mike Marshall cited as Cy Young Award winner

NEW YORK (UPI) — Manager Walter Alton says Mike Marshall is "really something else," and the Dodger relief ace really is.
Marshall was cited Wednesday as the National League Cy Young Award winner by the Baseball Writers Assn. of America. The award is given annually to the outstanding pitcher in the league. He is the first relief hurler so honored.
The tireless 31-year-old righthander, whose relations with the press have never been the best, nevertheless received 17 first place votes of the 24 ballots cast to give him an easy win over teammate Andy Messersmith.
Marshall lives during the off season in East Lansing. He is a psychology professor at MSU and is also studying for his doctorate here.

Marshall accepted the honor graciously, but said that "When Gene Mauch, Walter Alton and my fellow National League competitors consider me a top quality performer, that certainly means a great deal more."
MSU Sports Information Director Fred Staley, assistant Nick Vista and their staff will have their hands full Saturday in the Spartan Stadium press box.
Nearly 600 newsmedia representatives are

"I don't mean to belittle this award. In fact I'd like to thank all the sports writers. I realize it must have been a tremendously difficult selection with the great years Andy Messersmith and Don Sutton had."
"Iron Mike's" season-long work as the Dodgers won the NL title was record breaking. He appeared in a record 106 games, compiling a 15-12 won lost mark and 21 saves. Along the way he established a record for innings pitched by a reliever — 208 — and posted a 2.59 earned run average, fourth best in the league. He was a factor in 35 per cent of the Dodgers' 102 victories.

Messersmith, with a 20-14 slate, received five first place votes, 13 seconds and two thirds for second place.
The ABC television crew will bring people along for their coverage.

Big press contingent expected

MSU Sports Information Director Fred Staley, assistant Nick Vista and their staff will have their hands full Saturday in the Spartan Stadium press box.
Nearly 600 newsmedia representatives are expected to be on hand for the regionally televised game between MSU and Ohio State.
The ABC television crew will bring people along for their coverage.

Tips may help relieve job interview blues

LARRY MORGAN
News Staff Writer
As palms begin to sweat and notice you are shaking walk toward the small where your future may be determined within the next few minutes. A towering man behind the desk motions you to sit and your first job interview begins. Do not avoid completely and destroying any confidence you have in yourself, there are some things you should know about and prepare for before the interview.

"There are three objectives of an interview," Jack Shingleton, MSU Placement Services director said. First, it allows the employer to gain information about the candidate. Second, it allows the candidate to gain information about the employer and third, it allows a firm contract to be established between the candidate and the employer, he said.

"This is in the way of personalizing credentials," Shingleton said.
Be prepared
He said the most common mistake of students is not being adequately prepared for the interview.
"The persons should have a general understanding of the company's background," Robert W. Curran, chief engineer in propulsion design of the Boeing Commercial Airplane Co., said.

"A person should read any literature from the company they are interested in, and have some definite questions concerning themselves they want to ask," Shingleton said.
You should have a definite idea of what kind of job you are looking for before the interview.

Several recruiters said telling the interviewer you will take any job that is open is one of the fastest ways to get on the bad side of the recruiter.
Another point interviewers mentioned was the importance of being yourself and not putting up a front.
Honesty pays
"A person should be honest and forthright, because if you start to play games they will usually backfire," Shingleton said.

Shingleton said that during an interview a person should not try to hide his faults purposely. However he should not bring them up voluntarily.
For example, if you have used drugs, do not bring it up unless the interviewer specifically asks you about it. However, do not hide the fact if it is brought up, Shingleton said.
Maximize strong points
"There is a difference between this, and maximizing your strong points and minimizing your weak ones," Shingleton explained.
"Indicate any extracurricular activities. This shows leadership qualities," one recruiter said.
In general, Shingleton said, know the interviewer by name and use his name during the interview.

Be prepared to answer any personal questions that may come up. Many students are surprised when these questions do, he said.
Also, be knowledgeable about dates, such as high school graduation. Have them chronologically arranged in your mind, he said.
A person should be flexible, but know about any of his or her future plans like graduate school, military service or vacations.
One of the most important things is to fill out credentials concisely, properly and neatly. After the interview, make certain you know whether you are supposed to call the company and the dates of future meetings, he said.

Do not bring anyone into the interview with you, Shingleton said.
Ask questions
Do not be reluctant to ask questions pertaining to the job, as far as training programs, chances for advancement or the location of the job you will be taking.
Do not talk salary and fringe benefits until the company shows an interest in you, he said.
Do not be cocky either, or act like you can bring everything to the company.
Finally, the student's appearance should be sharp and clean, and he should have a resume with him or her.

SERVICE GIVES LIST OVER PHONE

Capsule of MSU events available

LARRY MORGAN
News Staff Writer
The uninformed there is 353-4343.
This number and you immediately be greeted "Welcome to Michigan University for the week of Nov. 4." Your naive will vanish.
This is the beginning of a capsule compiled by MSU Information Services, which lists events each week and service began six years ago to introduce visitors to 90 seconds.
The first used a courtesy at Capitol City Airport primarily at strangers to MSU which began with the Beaumont Tower bells and played a 90 second capsule summary of MSU," Fred Brufloft, senior information officer at MSU Information Services, said.

Then, about a year - and - a half ago, Information Services changed the approach and began giving a summary of campus events.
"We are now using a Code - A - Phone that plays out messages which we update periodically to give the public information about what is going on, particularly on the weekends," he explained.
The Beaumont Tower bells were then dropped from the recording. The original tape, recorded by WKAR, was similar to a commercial and was not meant to be changed as often as the present system.

Not every campus event goes on the recording.
"We do not use events that are only for faculty and students where an I.D. card is needed. We mainly use events that are open to the public," Brufloft said.
The recording also reminds the listener of facilities like the Museum and Kresge Art Gallery which are open throughout the year.
The recordings are changed every couple of days throughout the week. If there are enough activities, a different recording is used each day on weekends.

Over 100 calls are received every week, Brufloft said.
The telephone number of the Library Information Desk is given at the end of the recording in case the listener would like additional information on any event.
Information for the events is drawn from the information available to MSU Information Services, Brufloft said. Groups are welcome to call Information Services with additional events. The number is 355-2260.
In general, Shingleton said,

Grasso leads women to record victories

WASHINGTON (AP) — Led by governor-elect Ella T. Grasso of Connecticut, women have won record numbers of state and local elections, officials of women's political groups say.

"This year was the year of the breakthrough for women," Frances "Sissy" Farenthold, chairwoman of the National Women's Political Caucus, said about Tuesday's voting.

Democratic Congresswoman Grasso, who said her Italian immigrant parents "always taught me you could dare to dream," had a 3-2 margin over Rep. Robert W. Steele, becoming the fourth woman elector and the first to make it on her own.

Women have succeeded their husbands as governors in Texas, Wyoming and Alabama.

New York voters elected their first woman to a major state wide office, state Sen. Mary Anne Krupak. She ran for lieutenant governor on a slogan, "She's not just one of the boys."

There will be at least 17 women in Congress, compared to 16 now, but the Senate will remain all male. Three major party women Senate candidates trailed their incumbent opponents by considerable margin.

By early morning, a Nebraska race had proven the closest of any congressional campaign, with 62-year-old Virginia Smith trailing Democrat Wayne Ziebarth by margins varying between three and 200 votes.

In one of the most publicized contests, Republican

Judy Petty lost to House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills.

Women won their biggest victories at local and state levels. The kinds of women who sought and won the voters' approval were unprecedented in U.S. politics.

Among the state legislative winners were Catholic Sister Clare Dunn of Tucson, and a lesbian running on a gay liberation rights ticket, Elaine Noble of Boston.

But Beverly Harrell, operator of a legal bordello in Lida Junction, Nev., lost to service station operator Don Moody in a race for a Nevada Assembly seat.

North Carolina became the first state to elect a woman as chief justice of its Supreme Court, Susie Sharp. Alabama elected its first woman Supreme Court justice, Janie Shores of Birmingham.

Of the 16 women currently in Congress, three are retiring and Grasso quit to run for governor.

The women's caucus and other groups had been pessimistic that women could hold their own in Congress because of the candidates' relative lack of money and the number of tight races they entered.

The election of five new congresswomen was considered a major accomplishment, Betsey Wright, director of the National Women's Education Fund, said, "and it looks as if our prediction for a 50 per cent increase in state legislatures may be modest."

Liz Carpenter, a founder of the caucus in 1971, noted that it is still difficult for women to win national offices, though there are big gains in the city councils and state legislatures.

"The heartening fact is that women now have the courage to run and to win," she said.

Minority candidates gain offices

By Associated Press

Minority candidates won high political offices during Tuesday's elections with Mexican-Americans and a Japanese-American winning governorships, and two blacks becoming lieutenant governors.

In Hawaii, the entire top of the winning Democratic ticket — governor, lieutenant governor and three congressmen — was of Japanese-American ancestry.

One new black congressman was also elected, boosting the total in the House to 16. All 15 incumbents were re-elected.

Democrat Raul Castro, 58, edged Republican Russ Williams to become the first Mexican-American elected governor of Arizona and the first of his party to win the office in 10 years. Castro is a former U.S. envoy to Bolivia.

Jerry Apodaca, 40, became the first Spanish-American governor elected in New Mexico since 1918 when Octaviano Larrazolo served in the post. Apodaca, a Democrat, won a narrow victory over Joe Skeen, a rancher. Apodaca had been a state senator for eight years.

Hawaii Dems win

Democrats George Ariyoshi, 48, and running mate Nelson Doi, 52, won Hawaii's governor and lieutenant governor posts by beating Republicans Randolph Crossley and Ben Dillingham, respectively.

Incumbent U.S. Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, who had no

Republican opposition, won easily over David Kimmel of the People's party. Inouye's incumbent Democrat colleagues also won re-election. Rep. Spark Matsunaga beat Republican William B. Paul and Patsy Mink beat Caria Coray.

Black congressman

The new black congressman is Harold Ford, a 29-year-old Democrat who unseated Tennessee's Rep. Dan Kuykendall, a four-term Republican. Ford, a mortician and state representative, won in a Memphis congressional district that is 45 per cent black.

In California, Democratic state Sen. Mervyn Dymally, a native of Trinidad, was elected lieutenant governor over conservative Republican John Harmer. Dymally represented a low-income section of Los Angeles.

"Open doors"

In Colorado, Democrat George L. Brown was elected lieutenant governor. Brown, 48, was the first black elected to the Colorado senate when he won election in 1956.

"This is a joyous occasion but it has also charged us with a lot of responsibility," Brown said. "We are going to open a lot of doors for people."

Blacks were appointed to serve as lieutenant governors of South Carolina and Louisiana during the reconstruction era following the Civil War, but Dymally and Brown were the first blacks ever elected to the jobs.

Justice Kavanagh clinches court seat

DETROIT (UPI) — Thomas M. Kavanagh rode a famous political name and 16 years experience to a million vote showing in the state Supreme Court race Tuesday.

The 65-year-old widower also led the ticket in 1958 and 1966.

With 83 per cent of the vote counted, Kavanagh had clinched one of two Supreme Court posts with 1,086,429 votes.

Engaged in a tight battle for the second spot were John W. Fitzgerald, 49, appointed to the high court bench last year by Gov. Milliken, and Blair Moody Jr., the 46-year-old son of a former U. S. Senator.

Fitzgerald had 806,412 votes and Moody 789,352.

Trailing in fourth place was Allan C. Miller, 51, of East Tawas, who had 316,323 votes.

BIGGEST MARGIN SINCE '64 Dems control legislature

WILLIAM J. HOLSTEIN
United Press International
Democrats began grappling with how to shape the legislature Wednesday after gaining their lead in the state and amassing more votes in the Senate than at any time in the century.
Democrats picked up six seats in the House to give them a 44-44 edge, after beating Republican incumbents in Gen. Belmont and Pontiac, according to unofficial but complete results. They also picked up four seats where Republican incumbents were defeated.

In the Senate, a crop of young Democratic candidates scored smashing wins over five powerful GOP leaders, including Senate Majority Leader Milton Zaagman of Grand Rapids. The victories broke the 19-19 deadlock in the upper chamber, giving Democrats firm control with 24 votes.
The Democratic legislature could present Republican Gov. William G. Milliken with a major stumbling block in seeking enactment of his programs. However, the Democratic majorities in both houses fall just short of the two-thirds margins that would mean a "veto-proof" legislature.

The first pressing items of business appeared to be filling leadership posts and possibly undertaking some internal reforms.
Senate Democratic Floor Leader Jerome T. Hart of Saginaw announced that he will seek the powerful appropriations committee chairman post when Democrats take over committees in January.
In turn, Hart said he would support State Rep. William Fitzgerald, D - Detroit, 32, as his replacement. The likeable Fitzgerald won the seat vacated by his retiring uncle, Senate Democratic Leader George Fitzgerald of Grosse Pointe Park.

Leadership shuffles also shaped up in the House where Speaker William A. Ryan of Detroit has announced he will step down. Democratic Floor Leader Bobby D. Crim of Davison is a shoo-in to take that post.
House appropriations Chairman William Copeland, D - Wyandotte, lost his write-in campaign again to 23-year-old Jeffrey Padden, a trombone player who pulled an upset over the rotund Copeland in the August primary. State Rep. Dominic Jacobetti, D - Negaunee, could be in line for the chairman's spot, Democratic leaders said.
Democrats have held the upper hand in the legislature for only six years since 1900, four of those years during the 1930s. They have not had more than 23 seats in the Senate during this century.
They last controlled the legislature from 1964 - 1966. Then George Romney was elected governor in 1966, sweeping in GOP lawmakers.

Janitors clean up after Dems

By JACK EBLING
The Michigan Democratic Party cleaned up in state House Tuesday. After all the celebration was over, three janitors were left with the arduous task of cleaning up after the Democratic partying.
Expectations were high for election day that a Democratic mandate would be handed down not only in the Michigan legislature, but also in the governor's race.
Anticipating victory, the speaker's staff provided food and drink that was consumed by press, staff, janitors and carpeting alike.
Aside from the fifth of the that smashed to the floor and gave the rug a possibly permanent air of inebriation, the House Democratic office building is as good as new, after a good deal of scrubbing, sweeping and sweating.

Bill Bitz, who headed the midnight cleaning brigade, looked at the project as Denny Stolz or Bo Schembechler might have.
"If we work hard and take command of the situation from the outset, we should be able to whip this thing," he said.
Bitz was referring to food, drink and other leavings that filled seven thirty-six-inch-high barrels.
Andy Froh, who had just spent his morning vacuuming, had enough left to suggest to the crew, "Hey, let's go get a beer!"

Hardly believing his ears, Bitz glanced at his watch and said, "At 6:30 a.m.?"
Coming to his senses and realizing that he would have to be back at work again in 10 hours, Froh said, "I guess you're right. That's okay. I don't mind passing it up tonight."

Fire barbecues fried chicken shop

The Kentucky Fried Chicken building at 1040 E. Grand River Ave. was a lot crisper than the chicken Tuesday night as a fire gutted the building at about 10:15.
The fire was spotted by Glenn Shaw, who was working at a Bay gas station next door, when he noticed smoke coming out of the eaves of the building.
Shaw went over to the building. He felt the walls and back door and, finding they were hot, decided to call the police.

Four East Lansing fire units responded and broke down the front and rear doors to get at the fire.
Fire officials guessed that the fire started in the paper storage area in the kitchen. The fire burned out the kitchen. Damage was estimated at between $8,000 and $10,000.
Shaw said he was worried because there were 14,000 gallons of gasoline buried at the Bay station only 50 feet away.

Ford calls for cooperation in Congress

From Wire Services
WASHINGTON — His personal prestige dented by the Democratic landslide that he tried to prevent, President Ford abruptly changed his warnings Wednesday of a "legislative dictatorship" to appeals for cooperation and bipartisanship.

The switch possibly reflected a realization that the most likely immediate result of the midterm balloting could be the defeat of Ford's proposed income surtax and perhaps other segments of his 31-point economic plan.

Further into the future, the heavy Democratic majorities in both the Senate and House will make it increasingly difficult for Ford to write any sort of legislative program into law.

And in 1976, when Ford has said he "probably" will seek a term of his own, Ford's inability to deliver votes to Republicans this year may embolden California Gov. Ronald Reagan or other potential challengers for the GOP nomination.

But a spokesman said Wednesday that President Ford's inclination to run for the presidency in 1976 will not be affected by Republican setbacks in Tuesday's election.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said of the election outcome that "No one thinks this was a referendum on the President ... It will not affect the President's decision that he probably will run for election in 1976."

More than half of the Republican candidates for whom President Ford personally campaigned were defeated in Tuesday's elections.

During his campaign speeches in 20 states, Ford specifically endorsed 97 gubernatorial, Senate and congressional candidates. Of these, 56 lost and 33 won, with 8 races undecided.

In a written statement issued shortly before midnight, Ford seemed to concede that his economic program is not likely to become law without substantial changes.

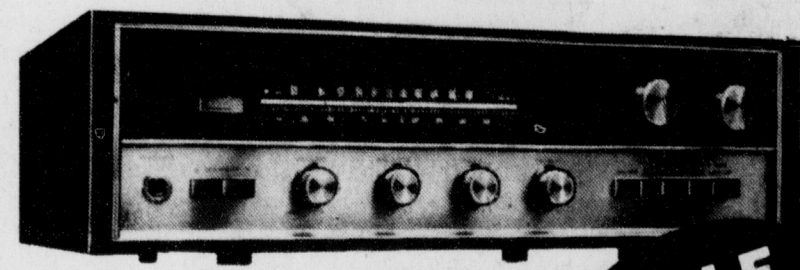

"The mandate of the electorate places upon the next Congress a full measure of responsibility for resolving (inflation) problems," President said. "I will work with them wholeheartedly on this urgent task which certainly beyond partitioning

Experts give motorists tips for winterizing

RALPH FRAMMOLINO
State News Staff Writer
Getting antifreeze as soon as possible should be a motorist's act of kindness toward his car and pocketbook as winter months roll in. Because of the soaring cost of antifreeze, local car experts suggest that conscientious motorists begin winter auto preparations by purchasing antifreeze before the cost rises or the supply dwindles. Other important checks in winterizing an automobile involve the steering, braking, engine cooling, starting, power and exhaust systems. Antifreeze necessary "Getting antifreeze is probably the most important thing because if you don't get it, you can crack your engine block," William Morey, mechanic at Okemos Mobile, 2421 W. Grand River Ave., said. "Cooling systems over a year old should be flushed and replaced with a 50 per cent antifreeze, 50 per cent water solution," John Hackett, Service Manager at Bob Baker

American Motors Corp., said. John Gilhouse, instructor of auto mechanics at Lansing Community College, said the percentage of an antifreeze and water solution needed varies between a 50 - 50 mix and a 60 per cent water and 40 per cent antifreeze mix. Rising cost The incentive to get antifreeze early for the winter months is enhanced by the rapidly rising price of the product. Gilhouse said antifreeze is made out of ethylene glycol, a simple polyhydric alcohol, which is also the ingredient used in brake fluid and for manufacturing knit clothing. He said that the increase in the volume of knit clothes resulted in the decrease in supply of the ingredient. "It's simply a situation of supply and demand," he said. "Battery goes down as the temperature goes down. The reason for this is because it works by a chemical reaction and most chemical reactions take place better in warmer conditions." Another vital check to insure safe driving during winter is the exhaust system. The experts agreed that the exhaust pipes should be checked for leaks that could be dangerous to drivers. Since most people drive with their windows closed, a small leak could allow a dangerous amount of carbon monoxide to enter the driving compartment. Last year 59 people died in Michigan because of leaking carbon monoxide.

Hackett pointed out that a car should be adequately lubricated to prevent salt, used for clearing the roads, from lodging in the hinges. Salt damage "Without the proper lubrication, the salt could do more damage than normal wear," he said. Gilhouse said late model cars to not necessarily need special winter preparations like older cars do. "We've pretty much got the car down to the point where it is an all season car," he said. All of the mechanics emphasize the need for a car to have the annual maintenance service done, along with these basic checks for winter.

Check cooling system
Gary Hall, mechanic at University Standard, 100 E. Sagnia St., said motorists preparing their cars for winter would be best advised to also check the cooling system of the engine. He said that an important part of that system is the thermostat, a valve on the outlet of the engine which controls the water flow into the radiator and thereby engine temperature. Most thermostats should be set at 180 degrees Fahrenheit.

Gilhouse said that a common problem encountered with the thermostat during winter is sticking, which can be easily diagnosed. If a thermostat sticks open, the motorist will notice that the heater will not blow hot air to heat the car. An open thermostat will result in poor gas mileage and gasoline sludge buildup. When the thermostat sticks closed, the car will boil over within a few minutes after it is started.

Antifreeze leak
Hoses should also be checked because precious antifreeze could leak.

The starting system, points and plugs, should also be checked, to insure good winter - time performance, Morey said.

"During the winter months, it takes more of a strain to start the car," he said. Worn points and plugs could easily leave someone out in the cold with an inoperative car.

Another important check should be performed on the electrical power system of the car - the battery and connecting cables.

Morey pointed out that dirty battery clamps prevent the power from getting through. He said the best way to clean the clamps is to take a knife and scrape the inside of the clamp clean.

Battery power
"During winter, half, or less than half, of the battery power is available," Gilhouse said.

A large dump truck passes a lone rider and his mule on a road leading to the immense Toktogulskaya dam and hydropower station on the Soviet Union's Naryn River. The dam, upon completion, will provide a vast area with electricity and irrigation waters.

Democrats pledge to compromise, cooperate with Ford

differences within both parties. An analysis of the returns did point toward a new Congress more liberal than the current one and more likely to press aggressively for its solutions to domestic issues. Even while votes were still being counted, Democratic congressional leaders were taking a harder line. House Speaker Carl Albert declared the results a repudiation of Ford's economic proposals and said Democrats had a mandate for action on such programs as national health insurance, tax reform and public service employment. From the White House, Ford acknowledged his party had been soundly licked. He singled out inflation as the top issue and said "the mandate of the electorate places upon the next Congress a full measure of responsibility for resolving this problem." Most of the results followed the morning line, but there were some surprises. In Vermont, Patrick J. Leahy became the first Democrat ever elected to the Senate, defeating Richard W. Mallary for the seat being vacated by George Aiken. And in Maine James B. Longley, an independent who ran as an "antipoliticalian," defeated both the major party candidates for governor. The election produced a flock of new Democratic prospects for the 1976 ticket, among them governors - elect Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California and Hugh Carey of New York, and Senators - elect John Glenn of Ohio and Dale Bumpers of Arkansas. But, it darkened the prospects of another rising Democratic star - Gov. John J. Gilligan of Ohio, who was unseated by former Gov. John Rhodes in a race so close that a recount was almost certain. There were, too, some Republican survivors who gained instant and special stature within their party simply by virtue of their survival in a bad year - most notably Gov. Milliken of Michigan, Gov. Robert D. Ray of Iowa and Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas. And there was new impetus to the movement begun four years ago toward a "New South" dominated by young moderate politicians in the Democratic party.

Seats don't always go with tickets

By LEONARD PENIX
A ticket does not necessarily guarantee a seat with East Lansing's three major sponsors of nationally - known entertainment - MSU Pop Entertainment, The Brewery and The Stables. The Stables has a "no seat guarantee" stipulation written on its tickets for this week's entertainment. It regularly sells 500 tickets for the 460 available seats, Stables manager Hank Fountain said. Appearing on tickets sold by the Union Board is the restriction "no refunds if cancelled due to violation of fire regulations." This means that if the fire marshal wanders into a campus event and does not like what he sees, he may close it down. Jim Fleming, Pop Entertainment adviser, said students are to blame if a concert is stopped. "We are not overcrowded because we never sell more tickets than we have seats for," he said. "However, if students sit on the floor or arrange the seats so that there is a disproportionate number in the rows, the performance could be halted." Hugh Surratt, asst. director to the dean of students, said that in addition to the complaints cited by Fleming, matches lighted for encores also are responsible for abbreviated shows. Both Surratt and Fleming said students were to blame for the shortened J. Geils concert last spring. Sgt. Richard Murray of the East Lansing Police Dept. said patrons unable to find seats in bars have registered complaints with authorities. There is a city ordinance against the fraudulent over - selling of tickets. But over - selling is hard to prove, he said. "There is no way to police the number of tickets sold," Murray said. "As a result, it is very hard to prove fraud in court."

Students have the right to demand their money back if seats are not made available, he said. At Roger McGuinn's performance at The Stables Friday, Ken Zraggen, 20, junior, complained about the situation. "If you want a seat you have to get here early," he said. "If I bought a ticket and got here late, I'd sell it." Another Stables patron, Christine Christensen, 21, was critical of the restaurant's available seating. "At $3, I wouldn't even want to sit in some of the seats they offer, much less stand up," she said. Gary Stevens, East Lansing fire marshal, said that though he cannot stop ticket over - sale practices, he can close places down if they become overcrowded. "If the bar is overcrowded and we don't catch it, you can have a good time. If we do catch it, you will have to leave," he said. Paul Kacer, an owner - manager of The Brewery, said the legal capacity of 720 is still often exceeded by 30 people. "It is hard to get a band to play for less than 750," he said. The legal capacity does not mean that there are 720 available seats because many of the tables are of the stand - up variety. Also, the seats in the lounge have no view of the stage. John Strandholm, 20, senior, complained about spectator conditions at The Brewery. "I couldn't believe how crowded it was for the Weather Report concert," he said. "It took an effort just to find a decent place to stand."

Officials put heat on bars

Violations issued by the fire department, however, are dealt with by the city attorney, rather than the Liquor Control Commission. Patriarche said his recommendations to the city attorney that the Alle - Ey be cited for a capacity violation for having about 200 over capacity on Oct. 25 could result in a court dispute if the capacity violation charge is disputed by the Alle - Ey. McGinty said the Alle - Ey owner could be fined up to $500 by a District Court judge if he pleads guilty to the violation. He said he will decide this week whether police and fire reports justify prosecution. Patriarche said three firemen, three policemen and the city attorney all participated in a head count at the Alle - Ey on the 25th when the Alle - Ey was noted to be in violation of city code. "The police head count was made after ours, and they came out only one or two different than ours, which was between 175 and 200 over the 413 capacity," Patriarche said. Discussion concerning violations of capacity restrictions arose at an East Lansing precouncil meeting Oct. 22. Mayor Wilbur Brookover said he initiated the discussion, and council members agreed that police and fire officials should analyze the situation and make recommendations to the council.

Brookover said the discussion was unofficial, though, and no reports have been made to the council yet.

Poultry club sells holiday birds

By PEGGY GOSSETT
State News Staff Writer

If you plan on gobbling up a holiday turkey bought from the MSU Poultry Science Club, take note. Your fowl is not home-grown on MSU Spartan soil, but imported from a Zeeland, Michigan processing plant.

Members of the club buy hundreds of turkeys from Bil-Mar Foods, Inc. and sell them primarily to MSU faculty and students around Thanksgiving. The turkeys are now on sale.

"If we raised our own we might not get the best quality," Timothy Chang, associate professor of Poultry Science, said.

He said it takes 20 to 30 weeks to raise a batch of turkeys. MSU students do not have sufficient time to raise their own top quality fowl.

"It would be easy if they didn't have to go to classes," Chang said.

He said the turkeys must be raised in large quantities under supervised conditions, and processed immediately after slaughter.

Another major reason for importing turkeys is that MSU does not have facilities to package the turkeys after slaughter.

Chang said it is therefore cheaper and easier to buy turkeys already processed. Bill-Mar Foods gives top priority to MSU.

"We are supposed to be experts in quality of poultry, so the company gives us the best turkeys in the state," Chang said. "I guarantee that. We all guarantee that."

Chang said turkeys from commercial stores might be frozen since last Thanksgiving. This often results in loss of flavor and freshness in the bird.

Each turkey bought from the Poultry Science Club's annual sale is guaranteed to be frozen for one month or less. This is their twentieth annual sale and the club expects to sell about 400 turkeys.

The Poultry Science Club turkeys sell for 62 cents per pound if over 15 pounds, and 65 cents per pound if 15 pounds or under.

A price check around town shows turkeys in Larry's Shop Rite sell for 69 cents per pound for Butterball and 59 cents per pound for Spartan brand.

Eberhard's stores at all locations price their Thanksgiving birds at 79 cents per pound for Butterball and 65 cents per pound for Grade B birds.

Both stores reported the same prices will be in effect at Thanksgiving.

Any profit made by the Poultry Science Club goes to the club's activity fund. Every year about $200 are made, which finances student trips and the annual banquet.

And if they have turkeys left over from the sale?

"Usually we have one or two for the club's own turkey dinner," Chang said.

Community volunteers offer warmth, friendship to MSU foreign students

By SUE McMILLIN

State News Staff Writer

The Community Volunteers for International Programs offer MSU's nearly 1,200 foreign students and their families warm coats, baby cribs or friendship while they are in the MSU community.

The program started in 1959 when some faculty members asked people in the community to loan warm coats to foreign students from tropical countries. Today the program has grown to include English language classes, a lending center, transportation, coffees for foreign wives and their children plus homemaking sessions.

The community volunteers have compiled an information booklet which is given to foreign students on their arrival at MSU. It covers such topics as shopping, family life and social customs, health information, United States postal services, legal holidays and tables for conversion of temperatures, weights and measures.

"We provide additional services that the University has been unable to provide," Betty Robertson, chairman of the Volunteers, said.

One of the major projects of the community volunteers is their host family program. Foreign students are matched to a family in the community and participate in some of the families' activities during the year.

Robertson said that foreign students interested in obtaining a host family indicate it on a card at registration. Both the student and the family are interviewed by a volunteer to discover their likes and dislikes.

Host families are required to attend an orientation session and meet the students they have been matched to.

The Host Family Committee presently has a long list of foreign students who are awaiting a host family. Audrey Nilsson, head of the committee, said.

Currently, about 300 families participate in the program.

The program's lending center, at 4100 E. Lane, loans baby furniture, household items and warm coats to foreign students.

Students are allowed to borrow things for up to three months after they arrive at MSU and are asked to return them when they leave the community.

The center charges $1 per coat, a $5 deposit on baby cribs, of which $1 is refundable and $1 for all the essentials of household items.

Robertson said that the $1 charge for coats covers the cost of dry-cleaning.

People wishing to donate items to the lending center can bring them to the center or phone 332-3915 or 349-1511. The center is open from 2:30 to 4 p.m. on Thursdays.

Other projects include:

- Free English classes for non-English speakers. Classes range from beginning to advanced. Free child care is provided.

- Homemaking American style for foreign wives. The program offers tours of shopping areas and sessions on food and clothing selection. Wednesday they will have public health services.

- Morning coffees for foreign wives and children. The next coffee will be held 9:30 to 11 a.m. Tuesday in the lounge of the United Ministries of Higher Education, 1111 Harrison Road.

- Providing transportation for students and visitors on special occasions.

For more information on these programs drop by the Community Volunteers International Programs Office, 4100 E. Lane, International Center, or phone 353-1718.

Becoming a physician is a tremendous satisfaction. Let us give you the job satisfaction that should go with it.

Whether you're still in medical school with the rigors of three to five years of graduate medical education still to be faced, or are already a practicing physician, it's our opinion that the Air Force can offer both professional and personal satisfaction hard to duplicate in civilian life.

An overstatement? Not if you consider the specialties.

Take the problem of graduate medical education. It's a period of your life the Air Force can make considerably easier with comfortable salary and living conditions.

Greater comforts aside, the Air Force offers professional advantages. Besides receiving training in your own specialty, you'd be in contact with physicians in all of the medical specialties. You'll function in an environment which is intellectually stimulating and professionally challenging.

Not all physicians pursue post residency fellowships. But if you are interested, the Air Force conducts them both in-house and at civilian institutions.

The physician already in practice can look forward to other things. If you want training in the practice of the medicine of the future, you'll find it in the Air Force. For example, there's emphasis on group medicine and preventive medicine, and the growing specialty of "family physician." Whatever your interest, there are few specialties which are not being practiced in today's Air Force.

The physician starting his practice in civilian life has to take into account the cost of setting up an office. The physician commencing his practice in the Air Force does not. He finds his office established for him. Supplies and equipment readily available. He has many options available to him when treating patients. For example, he can consult with Air Force specialists. He also has referral to other Air Force facilities via aeromedical evacuation. Last, but not least, are the satisfactions that come with having the opportunity for regular follow-ups, and a missed appointment rate that is practically nil.

Whether you are already a physician, or soon to become one, you might find it extremely interesting to find out what the Air Force has to offer. We think it could be a real eye-opener. If you'll mail in the coupon, we'd be happy to send you detailed information.
