Wharton cited as candidate for top U-C position

By PAT NARDI
State News Staff Writer
President Wharton is reportedly one of those being considered for president of the campus University of California system.

WHARTON

Wharton graduated cum laude from Harvard in 1947 with a B.A. degree in history. He also earned a Ph.D. in economics from the University of Chicago, and has several honorary degrees.

Wharton is reportedly one of those being considered for president of the campus University of California system. The Los Angeles Times reported Sunday California's Board of Regents has cut Wharton was not available for further comment, however. "His name pops up quite frequently on people's lists without him knowing it," Perrin said.

The president of the University of California school system is in charge of nine campuses in California, including the universities in Berkeley, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Davis, Los Angeles (UCLA), Santa Barbara, Riverside, Irvine and San Diego. Over 100,000 students attend the schools.

The regents, who are planning to make their final selection by March, say they are looking for someone "very aggressive, firm and strong."

The candidates will be judged on their scholarly background, proven administrative ability and familiarity in dealing with government agencies.

The retiring president earns $59,500 yearly. Wharton earns $57,500.

Other men being considered for the position include: University of Michigan president Robben Fleming; John Hoagness, president of Columbia University; Ernest Boyer, chancellor of New York State universities, and David Gardner, president of the University of Utah.

The 48-year-old MSU president, who took office as the University's 14th president in 1969, was the first black president of a major university.

Wharton has also done extensive work in the world of agriculture. He is presently a member of several boards of directors, including the Ford Motor Co. Board of Directors.

Museum called bad fire hazard; no safety improvements expected

By PAUL PARKER
State News Staff Writer
Though MSU Fire Marshal Sam Gingrich says the Museum is the worst fire hazard on campus, the University has no plans to do anything about it.

entire building should have sprinklers. Some of the exhibits are tinder dry. The right side of the Museum has no fire escapes. Some of the display areas are dead ends.

MSU officials admit that the problem is serious, but in the light of other fire safety problems on campus the Museum is low on the priority list.

A memo from Gingrich dated Jan. 9,

1975, lists 11 fire hazards found during a recent inspection of the Museum. Except for the lack of a sprinkler system and open stairways, the deficiencies in Museum fire safety were of a housekeeping nature. Gingrich included makeshift wooden office partitions, improper storage of inflammable materials, makeshift electrical wiring and loose trash as other fire hazards.

Rollin Baker, Museum director, said memos have been sent to the museum staff to correct these deficiencies, but said the plywood partitions would stay because they are too costly to replace.

"I could find letters from the last 15 years asking for these improvements," Baker said. Baker has sent at least three different memos on this subject to his superiors since May 1973.

On Jan. 30, 1974, Baker sent a Safety Inspection Report made by Gingrich along with suggestions for improvements to his superior, Robert Davis, an asst. provost. In February 1974 Davis sent a memo to Provost John Cantlon with Baker's letter and the Safety Inspection Report.

Baker quoted Davis' memo as saying: "If there is a major fire, Rollin Baker will be able to point to this attached letter as an example of our negligence and his foresight in this matter." Cantlon was unavailable for comment.

Jack Breslin, executive vice president, said the Gingrich memo was the first that he had heard of the hazardous conditions at the Museum. Breslin sent the letter to Space Utilization Director Jim Peters as a matter of procedure.

Though Peters said the cost of remodeling the Museum is very high, he has not and will not get an estimate of the cost unless directed to do so. Peters said that it is "rather unlikely" that any improvements will be made at the Museum in the near future.

"I can't make any excuses for the entire building not being sprinkled, the stairways not being enclosed and the lack of emergency exits at the end of the building," Peters said. "Those are structurally an integral part of the building. If a finger needs to be pointed, then point it."

The present priority item among buildings on campus that need remodeling is the Human Ecology Building, which does not meet the state fire code. Like the Museum, the Human Ecology Building along with the Horticulture building has open stairwells.

Boston U. cancels visit by Ziegler

The student government assembly at Boston University's school of public communication voted Monday to rescind an invitation made to former White House news secretary Ronald Ziegler to speak at the school.

Ziegler had been scheduled to speak at the university Feb. 26, the day before he comes to MSU for an afternoon seminar and evening speech.

John Wicklein, dean of the Boston school, said the faculty had asked the students to take the action.

"This school is dedicated to the idea that the presence of free press is essential to democracy," Wicklein said. "Ziegler took part in the Nixon Administration's effort to suppress the free press. I wouldn't want to see Ziegler or anyone else get rich because of their association with the Watergate

AROUND THE WORLD IN 80 CRAZES Crazy fads not limited to U.S.

By LINDA CHARLTON
New York Times
It's Loden coats. In Beirut, it's machines. England is currently mad about waffles, and blue jeans are still big in the United States — though definitely passe there. And in Japan, the fad of the streaking, closely followed by the those passing fancies too short to sweep from country to country with a discernible rhyme or reason, often a substantial, brief profits to the entrepreneur canny enough to anticipate the next "in" thing will be.

enjoyed more or less spasmodic popularity in other countries. In Moscow, American-made blue jeans fetch between 20 and 35 rubles a pair these days (one ruble is the equivalent of $1.33). Denim jackets can command 75 rubles.

But in Paris, faded jeans have faded out of favor this year. They are not as chic as once they were in Hong Kong, either. In South Vietnam, military patches and insignia sewn onto shirt sleeves, pockets and hats are the current rage. Last year, it was roller-skating, which fizzled as suddenly as it arose.

Boots are this year's darling in Paris, as they are in Bonn — though last year the boot fad was so ephemeral that most producers didn't sell even a third of their stocks. And this year's fad word to describe what is in this minute is just that: "in."

This year's entry in the hula-hoop sweepstakes from Britain are weird, furry little creatures called "wombles" that live under Wimbledon Common, scavenging litter. Starting as a BBC children's program, the wombles — who have names like "Bungo" and "Orinoco" — have spawned a pop group whose best-selling records include "Remember, You're a Womble." There are womble posters, tee-shirts and toys, and plastic wombles for the garden which cost more than $10.

The womble fad has been joined by the British government. The environmental department has enlisted the wombles in trying to clean up the countryside by making Britons as litter-conscious as the "wombles of Wimbledon."

Food is common fad — such as the souvlaki stands that sprang up in New York City a couple of years ago, following the decline of pizza. In Taiwan, western-style coffee shops are newly popular. Barbuecs were last summer's fad in Germany — in gardens, on balconies or even in doorways.

Pinball machines — "flippers," are the rage in Beirut, Lebanon, where they were banned until 1969. Now there are "flipper" arcades and there are plenty of second-hand machines available from countries such as Spain and Japan, where the fad has passed.

Japan's fad of the moment is streaking, which was big last year in the United States. The first recorded streaker appeared — briefly — in Tokyo in March, 1974, and since then the Japanese National Police have issued a "white paper" on streaking, with breakdowns of streakers by age and sex.

Another waning U.S. fad, the occult, was even bigger in Japan last year. When "The Exorcist" opened at a Tokyo movie theatre last summer, six girls were crushed in the stampede to the box office. Teachers complained about the number of pupils skipping class to see the movie. It ran for 18 weeks, was seen by 3 million Japanese and grossed $9 million.

In Mexico, fads tend to be the preserve of the wealthy. This year, it was winter vacation skiing in Colorado; squash was the trendy game for the middle-income, middle-aged executive who could afford it.

Fads are rare in the Soviet Union because of the controlled economy and limited consumer goods. This year's major fad is the phrase "Nu Pogdil" which means, "just you wait!" It is the title and punch line of a cartoon series that became popular enough to prompt the production, briefly, of lapel badges, shirts and patches. The creator of the series, Felix Kandel-Kamov, has applied to emigrate to Israel, and his name has been removed from the series.

Fads are unknown in China, where tightly controlled society lacks, above all, the profit motive that lies behind the emergence of many fads.

And in Greece, the word "democracy," attached to everything from films to women's fashions, is magic this year, since the military regime collapsed last July. The music of Mikis Theodorakis, which was banned by the junta, now accounts for three-quarters of total record sales in the country.

Prostitute's charges may stir investigation

By ALLAN LENGEL
State News Staff Writer
Lansing Mayor Gerald Graves says there will be an investigation into the Lansing Police Dept. if a prostitute quoted in Friday's State News story testifies.

The mayor first responded on radio stations WJIM and CKLW last weekend to a State News article Friday in which a prostitute accused four or five Lansing police of being her customers while off duty.

The woman also accused the police of brutality and said that one plain clothes officer had used her services and then threatened to arrest her if he did not get his $20 back.

Graves told a WJIM reporter Friday that while the woman who made the statements may have had a grudge against the department, an investigation would take place.

Graves asked for the cooperation of the State News Monday afternoon. He said the investigation would probably not occur unless the paper provided the name or phone number of the woman.

"We can't conduct an investigation on what the article says," Graves said Monday. "We need that person to testify and give specifics."

"As far as we're concerned this woman could just be cooking up a story, and until we get solid proof everyone is presumed innocent."

Yankees face forced march

By the mid-1930's drought had turned the American prairie into a dust bowl and started the great migration to California. President Ford's oil program, which seems designed to turn the Northeast into an ice bowl, contains the makings of a comparable migration.

Bumper stickers in Dixie last winter said, "Let the Yankee bastards freeze," and the message seems to have been heard in Washington. The President's insistence on raising the price of imported heating oil will be particularly chilling in the Northeast because of its heavy dependence on imports.

In this region poor people are already turning blue because they can't pay oil bills, which have doubled in a year. With the price of heat about to take another big jump at government command, the less penniless Yankees may be frozen deep before the spring thaws set in.

Electricity bills, which keep pace with the flight of oil prices in the Northeast, are already as big as home-mortgage payments for many lower-income people, and another whopping increase may revive the kerosene lamp, relic of dust-bowl days on the prairie.

Is it reasonable to expect people to grin and bear it, or, to use Washington phraseology, to tighten their belts and bite the bullet? In the short run, maybe. In the long run — a run that Washington thinkers are usually too harried to think about — it seems unlikely.

The more likely result will be one of those great population upheavals which send waves of Americans searching for greener fields, or in this case warmer climates.

If the government has thought this thing through, which is doubtful, it must anticipate a mass population shift from the Northeast to the South and Southwest. The social and political turmoil will create government headaches at least as fierce as the present oil puzzle, which has driven the President to this curious solution, and Southerners, at a guess, will rue their cry to put the Yankees on ice.

The ultimate jest on Dixie, the final twist of the knife, might very well be a rejuvenation of Yankeeeland, brought about by a transfer of the region's most impoverished people to the warming sunshine and cheap oil of the Julep Belt.

This is because hardship is always the spur of the emigrant, and because the worst hardships of the ice bowl — snow-drifted parlors, unlit homes, frozen plumbing — will affect mostly the jobless, the poor, the welfare client.

As these persons decamp in multitudes for the Southland, the well-heeled classes will benefit from being relieved of an onerous tax burden. The robust jump in oil prices may prove to be a small price for the well-to-do to pay if it transfers the burden of poverty to distant, mellow climates.

The President and his advisers must be aware, of course, that the warmer states will not extend welcoming arms to the ice-bowl migrants. California was not happy about the exodus of the Okies in the 1930's, and it would be unrealistic to expect the sunshine states to be any more hospitable to the Chillies of the 1970's.

We can easily imagine the hardships they will face, camped in thousands on the Texas state line, waiting for the dark of the moon so they can slip over the border without being caught by the rangers, drifting southward toward the Rio Grande through towns with signs saying, "No Chillies allowed within city limits after sundown," working a thousand tricks to conceal their frostbitten fingers and chilblains.

They will get there, just as the Okies got to California, and the sunshine states will never be the same again. Gradually the politics of Phoenix will become like the politics of Boston, and the welfare bills of Dallas will surpass the welfare bills of New York.

A bizarre possibility? Not at all. Americans reach the end of the line, they move in irresistible masses to the Indians. By pushing the poor Northeast very close to the end of the President's oil program there create one of those economic disasters sets vast waves in motion.

If anybody in Washington has any sense, this possibility there is no evidence so far shown no awareness of the President's program presents a stability.

A sensible citizen of the sun states cover up his old bumper sticker with a new one that said, "Keep the bastards warm."

$60,000 answer due

The University administration promised Monday to release a full statement explaining how the MSU Board of Trustees spent over $60,000 last year.

Any unjustified discontent brought on by the fat expense purse can only be quelled by the complete itemization of the fund. Meanwhile, trustees who now are driving cars furnished by the University must reconsider their recent decision to keep them.

As public servants, trustees should neither desire nor receive this type of quasilegal compensation.

Many University departments have been bled dry by the current economic situation. For instance, the School of Metallurgy is due to be eliminated, at least partially for monetary reasons. A tuition increase is also being forecast.

The Library may also be forced to deprive students of some services. And handicapped students are limited in their choice of majors because many MSU buildings are still not accessible to them, as the funds for building modifications are meager.

But yet, as these and other areas are in desperate need of more money, the trustee expense record continues to rise and the trustees continue to drive Delta 88s. Claims that these cars are not put to personal use seem spurious. Patricia Carrigan, in fact, does not even own a car, except for the one from the University.

The board should follow the lead of newly-elected trustees John Bruff, D-Fraser, and Raymond Krolkowski, D-Birmingham, by refusing to accept University supplied cars.

After all, charity begins at home.

City can thin out bars

While attorneys for the Alle-Ey and the City of East Lansing prepare for a crucial court confrontation in regard to overcrowding, the city council has called attention to its ace in the hole.

The council will review the bar's application for renewal of its liquor license in April. Several council members have indicated that the council may not recommend renewal, and spokesmen for the Michigan Liquor Control Commission have said the council's recommendation will be followed. This significant weapon held in reserve by the council could ultimately correct the overcrowding problem in area bars.

The overcrowding citation filed against the Alle-Ey on Nov. 12 will come to trial Feb. 5. If the city wins its case, the bar and others can be forced to comply with safety codes by means of repeated citations and repeated finances of up to $500 each. Even if the bar owners manage to win in court because of vague wording in the fire safety code, they would have to face a hostile council with the power to put them out of business, at least temporarily.

Since the original citation was issued, the overcrowding situation has not improved. The Alle-Ey has been charged with a second violation. Dooley's has also received a citation. Perhaps the possibility of losing their liquor licenses will prove a more effective deterrent than the threat of a fine.

To allow overcrowding to continue would be to risk a major disaster in case of a fire. It would be preferable to eliminate overcrowding through court action, but council would be fully justified in using other means to eliminate such a menace to the safety of East Lansing residents.

ACLU barks up wrong tree

In May, 1971, the hard core of the militant protesting set descended on the nation's capital, determined — as its leadership put it — to "stop the government" by bringing auto traffic in Washington to a standstill.

These rioters were not gentle souls carrying candles, but largely the toughs and crazies who marred the peace movement. As they proceeded to slash tires, terrorize motorists and pedestrians, and roll cans of garbage into the streets, the District of Columbia police moved to prevent anarchy. Unlike the reaction in Chicago in 1968, there were no police charges to crack skulls; nor was there any panicked use of firearms as in Jackson State or Kent State. Instead, the District of Columbia police rounded up some 14,000 of the rampaging terrorizers and made them guests of the city in a football stadium overnight.

The real threat of mob rule had been averted with a minimal application of force. The civil liberty of the law-abiding citizen to walk on a public street or drive to work had been protected.

However, in making "mass arrests," the police had infringed upon the civil liberties of the demonstrators. Under our system, arrests for other than individual acts are wrong. A man cannot be jailed for what the man next to him in a crowd may have done, (unless we apply the conspiracy statutes). Quite rightly, the local courts threw out the arrests as illegal and the Mayday tribe went home, never to be heard from again.

Until now, not content with the way the police had protected the civil liberty of most Washingtonians and the courts had then protected the rights of these mass-arrested, the American Civil Liberties Union sued the taxpayers of Washington for damages to those arrested, and one of the sensitive capital juries just popped for $12 million.

Twelve hundred of the demonstrators will now each receive about $10,000 each for the indignity suffered and former fulltime demonstrators all over the country are coming out of the woodwork to make their claims. This decision, unless reversed on appeal, will turn justice on its head.

But no editorial cannons boom; since the forces of "repression" are trounced, the award of $10,000 to each of these participants in an effort to plunge a city into anarchy is met with equanimity. Who dares to shorthedge the new heroes? They came to bring a city to its knees, and were denied that indulgence; for their trouble, they are to be paid at the daily rate of an Oanassis.

Ah, says the ACLU, but think of the principle: local governments will qualify before making any more mass arrests. That is simply not so. If the forces of law erred, as they undoubtedly did, official reprimands ought to have been sought, new regulations to meet such a situation proposed and debated. But that would have required hard legal and political action.

If it is difficult to punish the law, and unpopular to punish the provocateurs of repression, who is there to punish? The answer is clear: the taxpayers.

The local citizen in the District of Columbia, who was forced to endure a night of terror, now must pay for the entertainment in $12 million out of the general treasury to a group of those who threatened that terror. Perhaps the protesters' payoff — Mayday's Payday — can be squeezed out of day-care centers or policemen's salaries.

Civil liberty cannot stand many more such victories that stand justice on its head. The ACLU, quick to defend the fashionably disreputable, is slow to react to the clear and present danger of "the new torture," far more important to the cause than yesterday's demonstrations. Which takes us from "Mayday" to "Playboy."

Recently, a women employe of Playboy publisher Hugh Hefner was convicted of a

MSU racism

At the beginning of this term, the State News ran an article entitled "Job opportunities bleak in '75; outlook best for minorities." The point of this article was that women and minorities can find jobs easily. The very next day there was a front-page article stating that the University has not met its meager requirements for "affirmative action." The article said that there were 5 percent minority and 12.3 percent women faculty at MSU. These percentages are disgustingly low. The picture becomes even bleaker, however, when coupled with the harassment, low pay, and firings which minority faculty members face here at MSU.

Recession and cutbacks in jobs and financial aid are hurting everyone. What hurts us all even more is when we allow certain groups of people (minorities and women at this point) to be singled out and hit the hardest by discriminatory treatment and firings.

There are many such instances at MSU, as is testified to by the fact that there are several suits against the University by women faculty members (as reported in the State News article "U unfair, women say").

Two such examples are Georgia Johnson, asst. professor of medicine and Lois Humphrey, associate professor of family ecology, both of whom are facing termination at MSU. Dr. Johnson, a black woman, has faced much harassment due to her outspoken attitude opposing racist medical care. She has been a physician for 19 years and a faculty member at MSU for six years. The Dept. of Human Medicine has suddenly decided she's not qualified. Dr. Johnson was counted four times in the "affirmative action" report, since she is a black woman employed in two departments—so much for the validity of the statistics.

The MSU chapter of the International Committee Against Racism (INCAR) has formed a subcommittee to fight racist and sexist cutbacks which will meet at 8:30 p.m. in 39 Union. All those who are interested in opposing these firings in specific, and cutbacks in general, are strongly urged to attend and participate. The next job lost may be your own.

For the record

I feel obliged to request a correction of the rather garbled statement attributed to me in Pete Daly's article concerning Trustee use of University automobiles (State News, Jan. 20).

For the record, I reported at the January board meeting my own experience during the first year I drove a University automobile. On the basis of miles driven on University business, I would — as Mr. Daly reported — have "come out $268 richer" had I instead received reimbursement for use of a personal car.

Does that prove the policy "actually saves the University money?" Obviously not — and I made no statement to that effect. As a new trustee, I was told it does. However, I spoke only of my own experience; I have no data to speak beyond it. Patricia M. Carrigan, Vice Chairperson Board of Trustees

Floor space

This letter is to clarify some points concerning my overcrowding complaint against the Alle-Ey on Jan. 18.

The Alle-Ey has been consistently violating city fire ordinances. While court action is pending, Mr. Eyde stuffs his pockets with money taken at the possible risk to life and the discomfort of his patrons. Alle-Ey co-owner George Eyde's business interests seem to take priority over any human concerns. I am disgusted at his insensitivity, greed and purported ignorance. What kind of man operates a business and isn't aware of the basic laws governing that business? Mr. Eyde's claim that he wasn't aware that drinking liquor on the floor is illegal is absurd. If he is as ignorant as he claims, which I doubt, why was he issued a liquor license in the first place?

Mr. Eyde forgets that his establishment is centered upon the student population. He rewards this patronage by herding students in at a dollar a head. He cares nothing for the students' comfort or enjoyment. However, if you're willing to pay a dollar to sit on a floor, then I suggest you go to the Alle-Ey on Saturday night. I really doubt that anything will have changed.

Boston busing

The letter (State News, Jan. 22) defending South Bostonian behavior does have some good points necessary for a fair and rational view of the situation. However, in his reaction to militant anti-racists and big-brother government, Allan L. Reagen has dismissed some of the basic principles of our nation and displayed a certain ignorance of his own social perspective.

We do have a fundamental freedom of speech — but not a wholesale freedom of action. Everyone has a right to bigoted views, but no one has a right to bigoted actions — and such may not be defended by citing the right to pursue happiness, the responsibility and obligation government to protect any and all of from actions of bigots which are contrary to the social and legal principles defined in the Constitution.

Morals may not be legislative defenses against immoral behavior. It is essential to do so when a man tends to suffer at the hands of a mob. This, not the imposition of social gentility, is the justification for mass busing designed to defend black whites. It is unrealistic to some though. There is doubtful desecration attending schools that produce the notion of irrational products that Boston has manifested.

Both races may be equally guilty, but it is obvious which race bears the greater responsibility. Even if a portion of racists in both subsectors same, white racists outnumber black nine to one and white racism is central while its black counterpart practices same scale is relatively new.

The middle class (and better) would be a big step toward living responsibly. And the next time professionals rant and rave about admission advantages, slip and slide the innate advantages you have and don't deserve. We all have the right to pursue happiness, but not at the expense, and the maintenance of an inherited because of immoral discrimination is equally indefensible.

Noland of Kokomo, Ind., takes a practice run in his 7000 pound modified tractor pulling a sled with the front wheels off the ground in preparation for the Winternationals Class A National Tractor Pull competition. The competition is being held in the State Farm Show Building in Harrisburg.

Tractor races plow 'em over

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Tractor pulling contests were like corn husking bees held by farmers who gathered for fun, relaxation and friendly competition. Now the contests have gone big time. A recent three-day Winternationals Tractor Pull at the Farm Show here offered a $24,000 purse. Paying spectators were led away after a standing-room only crowd of 9,000 was admitted. Tractors no longer are brought in from the corn field to go at the neighbor's rig. They are ripping, splitting contraptions powered by supercharged or recharged engines — some with aircraft engines. Some of the tractors actually look like farm tractors. But those in the Class A Tractor Pull modified category more resemble drag racers. Some hopped-up engines cost $12,000, and a set of giant rear tires costs about $1,800. They don't go very fast — about 25 miles per hour is tops. A driver, hooked to a 57,000-pound sled, charges down a 200-foot dirt track, with front wheels in the air and fire shooting from the exhausts. Very few tractors manage to make it the full 200 feet, but when they do the crowd goes into an uproar. Lloyd McVey, one of the nation's top competitors, has been driving in tractor pulls for four years. He is also the owner of a nine-state trucking firm at Oakwood, Ill. "I was a farmer, and I used to be a drag racer," McVey said. "I was in drag racing 10 years and I quit to do this." Ron Barga, a 33-year-old Ansonia, Ohio, grain and livestock farmer, explained why he liked the competition. "Why does a guy play football?" he said. "It's something I'm good at."

Southern Dems losing influence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats, once the most powerful bloc in the Senate, are experiencing a further loss of power in the new Congress where they recently lost committee chairmanships. Now they are represented by only six of the 18 Democrats, compared to 10 of the 18 Republicans just five years ago. South traditionally has been a Democratic stronghold, but they automatically rose to high position through the seniority system. Former Sen. Richard B. Russell, D - Ga., their strategist through much of that period, saw to it that committee assignments allowed a Southerner always to be waiting in the second spot when another Dixie senator left a committee chairmanship. This system no longer works for a number of reasons. There are fewer Southern Democrats now because Republicans have succeeded in winning several seats from the region. There also is much more competition for Senate posts in the South now, both in Democratic primaries and general election races. Thus, a Southern Democratic senator can no longer be assured of holding on to his job for a lifetime. The two chairmanships lost by the Southerners in the new Congress were on the Government Operations Committee, where Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D - Conn., succeeded the retiring Sam J. Ervin Jr., D - N.C., and the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, where Sen. William Proxmire, D - Wis., took over from John J. Sparkman, D - Ala. Sparkman moved to the chairmanship of Foreign Relations, vacated by Sen. J. William Fulbright, D - Ark., who lost his fight for re-election. Sparkman, 75, is one of the four veteran chairmen from the South. Others are Sens. John L. McClellan, D - Ark., 78, Appropriations chairman and the Senate's oldest member; John C. Stennis, D - Miss., 73, Armed Services chairman, and James O. Eastland, D - Miss., 70, Judiciary chairman.

In the energy field, there aren't any easy answers

which is one very good reason for considering Atlantic Richfield for your career.

It's energy that has created and maintains the fabric of today's civilization. That's basic. But providing energy in vast amounts today — and preparing for the greater needs of tomorrow — is a tougher and more challenging problem than ever before. Now, new answers must be found to developing and utilizing energy — and its by-products — if we are to maintain our energy-based standards of living. We want the best brains we can find to help us arrive at these answers. We want people sensitive to the human and natural environment — and realistic enough to know that preserving both must come from tough, intelligent, dedicated work — backed by outstanding resources in capital, research and experience, such as those of Atlantic Richfield. We typically offer opportunities to accountants, financial analysts, auditors, programmers, chemists, geologists, geophysicists and engineers. See our representative on campus or your Placement Director. Should that not be convenient, write to Mr. O. J. Coats, Atlantic Richfield Co., 515 S. Flower St., Los Angeles, California 90071.

Lear repeats success with 'Jeffersons'

By KATHY ESSELMAN
State News Reviewer

"The Jeffersons" moved into the time slot next door to Archie Bunker, and it looks like they will be living there for a long time. Norman Lear can now, with some honesty, assert that his series covers a representative sampling of the black community. Lear is more addicted to the "spin-off" than any other major producer. It reads like Genesis — Archie and Edith Bunker begat "Maude," which in turn begat "Good Times." And now, "All in the Family" has given birth to "The Jeffersons."

spectrum. It seems worth mentioning that these are the only strong black roles on prime-time TV. A viewer will have to watch sports to see others.

Black staff

Lear, formerly Lear-Yorkin, specializes in black shows and depends on black writers and directors. The creators of "Good Times" come from the Cabrini Housing Project in Chicago, where the action of that series takes place. They are both black, as are half the staff of that series.

These are not black shows for white folk, but black shows for black people — Lear screened episodes of "Good Times" in the Cabrini project.

"The Jeffersons" reflects the reality of black affluence as well as the universal shock of upward mobility. The show has possibilities which at this time seem undeveloped or poorly handled.

Familiar characters

The characters seem like they were chosen by a process of selection from other Norman Lear series. The mother, played by Isabel Sanford, reminds you of Florida. Roxie Roker as the neighbor seems derived from Ilona of "Good Times," while her husband looks like a cut-rate version of the guy in the Ajax commercial.

These neighbors, the Willis', are an interracial couple whose daughter goes with Lionel. In the first episode, they showed an unnerving tendency to break into song in the middle of a conversation. It was easy to see why Mr. Jefferson did not like them — they made the viewer a little nervous, too. The pair improved by the second episode, but remain the most poorly conceived characters in the show.

Hastily constructed

The series has the look of a hastily constructed split-level. Right now it's all split and no level — eight characters in search of an author. The eccentric English neighbor played by Paul Benedict is a delight. And Zara Cully as Mother Jefferson portrays the mother-in-law "you love to hate" to perfection, all blue hair and mincing meanness.

However, "The Jeffersons" should have ample time to develop. It has some of the best one-liners heard this year. It also has the fast

Musical styles finely integrated in Mozi brothers recital Sunday

By ED ZDROJEWSKI
State News Reviewer

Music ensembles composed of relatives, like the Mozi brothers who appeared on campus Sunday, are always interesting to hear.

A listener can often pick out the nature of family relationships by attending a concert and sometimes it is possible to see that they get along well by the way they blend in musical performance.

The Mozi brothers exemplified the best ideals of this kind of family-performer relationship. There was enough sharp contrast between the two to keep the recital interesting from beginning to end, but they always managed to blend and never overshadowed each other.

Violinist Aladar Mozi had a bright, singing tone with a wide vibrato and played with a light, capricious feeling.

In contrast was the heavy style of pianist Stephen Mozi, which tended to bring out the richer, darker sonorities of his instrument. His style was particularly dramatic and romantic.

This contrast was brought out well in the "C Minor Sonata" by Beethoven. It worked well for the Beethoven because Aladar's brilliant sound enabled the violin to soar over the thundering piano. With any other kind of tone the violin would have been lost. This was remarkable because Beethoven, as a pianist, did not put his best violin parts into his sonatas. The tempos tended to rush but with Beethoven, that is better than dragging.

A "Sonatina" by Suchon followed and, at least in this work, Suchon must have been listening to a lot of Debussy. The style of the work was more Debussy than original.

The piece tended to emphasize the violin, almost like a concerto for violin and piano. Aladar dazzled the audience with a virtual fireworks display.

Stephen was doing much the same, but he subdued himself for this piece.

The evening closed with the "D Minor Sonata" by Brahms. This romantic work is a war-horse for violin and piano, but is always welcomed by audiences. The Mozi brothers gave this work a standard performance, which meant lush richness and a lyrical, singing quality.

Apparently Aladar and Stephen Mozi have a fine relationship going.

Students fail to support PIRGIM

NANCY E. CRANE
State News Staff Writer
The branch of the Public Interest Research Group in Michigan (PIRGIM) has disclosed that though 80 per cent of MSU students know what PIRGIM is, only about 30 per cent of them will give the group a dollar to help fund its work. PIRGIM has taken a survey of 120 students which revealed that most students know little about specific PIRGIM projects, though over 80 per cent know what the organization is. PIRGIM will use the results of the survey to zero in on the media in which to use promotional materials. This school term PIRGIM received $9,935 from MSU students at registration. It receives the money through a voluntary check off system. PIRGIM has consistently received contributions from about 30 per cent of MSU students.

PIRGIM cannot explain the discrepancy between the number of students who know about PIRGIM and the number of people who contribute to the organization.

Senate OKs spying investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted 82-4 Monday to launch a new Watergate-style investigation into allegations of U.S. intelligence agencies permitted to stray into legally forbidden areas of espionage.

Mondale, D - Minn., and Walter D. Huddleston, D - Ky. Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott named the panel's five GOP members last week. They are Sen. John Tower, R - Tex., who will serve as vice chairman, and Sens. Barry Goldwater, R - Ariz., Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R - Md., Richard S. Schweiker, R - Pa., and Howard Baker, R - Tenn.

Witnesses may be more forthcoming in secret sessions where national security interests will be easier to protect, Tower said.

William E. Colby, head of the CIA went before the committee for a second round of questioning.

There are a large number of persons still in public office who bear responsibility for the alleged abuses of the powers of the Central Intelligence Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other intelligence operations, Cranston said.

No opposition to creating the committee was expressed during two hours of Senate debate. Sen. Alan Cranston, D - Calif., called on the committee to conduct as much of its business as possible open to the full view of the public.

While this investigation cannot be a witch hunt, it cannot be a picnic either," Cranston said. "There are bound to be a lot of skeletons in a lot of closets."

Meanwhile, the commission appointed by President Ford and headed by Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller, resumed its probe of alleged wrongdoing by the CIA. Wil-

Quarterback slated to go first in draft

NEW YORK (UPI) — The National Football League college player draft, despite being ruled illegal by a federal judge a month ago, gets underway today with California quarterback Steve Bartkowski slated to be the No. 1 choice.

The Atlanta Falcons traded star offensive tackle George Kunz and their No. 1 selection, the third choice in the draft, to Baltimore last week for the No. 1 pick. The Falcons finished last in the NFL in offense last year and indicate they'll make the 6-4, 215-pound Bartkowski, the leading passer in college football last season, their first choice.

Bartkowski arrived in Atlanta Monday morning and the Falcons are expected to announce his signing right after they open the draft at 10 a.m. EST. His selection will break a three-year stranglehold on the No. 1 slot by defensive linemen. Walt Patulski (Buffalo), John Matuszak (Houston) and Ed "Too Tall" Jones (Dallas) have been the last three No. 1 drafts.

A federal judge ruled the draft "patently unreasonable" last month in ruling for former quarterback Joe Kapp against the league, but the NFL is planning to appeal and will go with business as usual in the draft.

Dallas has the second choice, having obtained it in a trade last fall which sent Craig Morton to the New York Giants. The Cowboys are expected to select Randy White, the 6-4, 248-pound defensive end from Maryland who was Lineman of the Year.

The teams will then continue to draft in inverse order of their final standings, with four more trades shifting choices in the first round. A total of 442 players who have used up their college eligibility will be selected in the 17-round session, which is expected to last two days.

Baltimore follows Dallas in the selection, with Chicago, Cleveland, Houston (from Kansas City), New Orleans, San Diego,

Los Angeles (from Green Bay) and San Francisco right behind. Los Angeles chooses again in the 11th slot on a choice between Philadelphia and the New York Jets, Detroit, Cincinnati, Houston, New England, Denver, Dallas, Buffalo, Los Angeles, St. Louis, San Diego (from Washington), Miami and Oakland follow. Minnesota and Pittsburgh, the two Super Bowl teams, select last.

IM NOTES

The women's intramural table tennis singles preliminary tournament will take place from 8 to 10 today in 118 Women's Intramural Bldg.

The entry deadline for the men's IM residence hall handball league has been extended to noon today. The deadline for independent handball has been extended until Wednesday and the deadline for singles handball is Feb. 7.

Co-rec ice league makes debut

By ROBIN MCINTOSH
State News Sports Writer

In today's society women are demanding equal opportunities in just about everything.

Equality has even been extended into the intramural sports program at MSU. Last year, there were three or four women playing in the men's ice hockey league. There was increased interest among women to play hockey this year, but not enough signed up to form their own league.

So the result has been the formation of the first IM co-recreational hockey league.

Katie Maher, 312 Campbell Hall, was mainly responsible for initiating the idea of a women's league.

"There was one girl on my floor who expressed an interest in playing ice hockey so I took it from there. We really don't have any set rules," Maher said.

"We need more women to play, though, and I can't emphasize that enough," she added.

The co-rec league began play Wednesday, and the teams tried out some new rules. There were no slapshots allowed, the men players could take no more than five strides when they were in possession of the puck, there had to be a minimum of two women playing on the ice for each team at all times and there was no checking.

"Right now, we are just experimenting with different rules," Maher said. "At the end of the season, we will have a meeting to vote on the rules that seemed to work out the best."

"I think the rule that has worked out the best so far is the five stride rule because it forces the guys to pass off. They are not hogging the puck all the time."

Women make up the majority of the rosters of the three league teams. Play will be of a round robin type with no league playoffs or champion. Competition will run for seven more weeks.

Maher is impressed with the abilities of some of the women players.

"We have had one game so far and I was surprised with the way some of the women played," she said. "Some of the men watching us were really impressed with the way they skated and handled the puck.

"Most of them are taking hockey courses right now, which can add to the success of the program if they do well. If given enough time, this league can really get off the ground."

Women cagers to oppose Calvin

MSU's women's basketball team will play its first home game of the season today, facing Calvin College at 6 p.m. in the lower gym of the Women's Intramural Building.

Coach Mikki Baile believes her squad should be on the lookout against Calvin.

"Calvin was first in the state last year, so our work is cut out for us. It will be quite a contest," she said.

The Spartan squad is coming off a split in its first two games of the year. MSU traveled to the University of Michigan Wednesday and won, 54-46. Linda Stoick led the Spartans' attack with 28 points, followed by Digna Goldschmidt, Gail Peacock and Diane Phillips who had eight apiece.

MSU lost to Central Michigan Friday, 50-40. Stoick applied the top scorer with 21 points, followed by Jacqueline Ferguson and Phillips with six apiece.

Cold predawn wait part of chilling search for jobs by students

SN PHOTOS/JOHN DOUGLAS

By SUSAN AGER
State News Staff Writer

When the double glass doors of MSU's Placement Services opened at 8:01 Monday morning, over 300 students were waiting for what grace they could find behind what some call the Pearly Gates to Jobdom.

Led off by former ASMSU President Ron Wahula, who arrived at 3:30 a.m., the line twisted, tangled and tottered through the Student Services Building, tumbling down stairs and hugging countless corners.

The vigil-keepers — sleeping, studying, gulping coffee, chomping donuts — were waiting not for jobs, not even for interviews, but only for time — from 20 to 60 minutes — in the tight schedules of the 56 employers who will be interviewing at MSU next week.

The line is there each Monday, but regulars — and there are many — say the early bird roosts earlier each week and the lines are getting longer.

According to Placement Services employees who have watched multitudes of student faces file by, Monday's line was the longest ever.

MSU Placement Services, considered a model by other American universities, last year arranged 19,399 student-employer interviews at MSU.

But Placement Services director Jack Shingleton says a declining number of interviewing employers (down 7 per cent from last year's 1,873) and visibly longer lines of students force him to call this the worst season he has seen in his 10 years with the bureau.

"There's much greater concern this year by students," Shingleton said. "There's no question that they understand the job market and, because of that, they're much more aggressive, looking much harder for a job."

The explanation is really so obvious it need not be mentioned, but those in the line talked placidly about the tight job situation, exchanging anecdotes, tips and cheap advice on how to improve a resume.

Some refused to talk to a reporter, fearing they would only have to come earlier next week as more students realize what competition there is.

"The less people talk about this the better," said one social science senior, who waited in line four hours to find that both the Dow Chemical Co. and Mobil Oil had no interview spots left for him.

"This is the third time I've come, I've come earlier every week, and been farther down the line each time," said another.

Indeed, for a growing number the Monday morning wait is routine. They know the rules, the tricks, and how to get into the building before the outer doors officially open at 6 a.m.

out Monday to employers. All of it is part of a campaign he began seriously this term — to lasso himself a good sales-oriented job.

"I'm looking for size," the senior in marketing said. "I wanna get a name behind me to start with."

He has researched the annual sales of each company seeking marketing grads, and decided to go this week for the biggies — Dow Chemical and Mobil Oil. This is his third week in line. He has arrived earlier each time, and says he will continue to do so. He stayed up all night studying.

By 7:15 the line has grown to 250 and wound down into the basement. These students are quieter than the early birds, perhaps because their chances are slimmer, especially if they have an obscure major and Placement Services. None has passed through he says he got much better feedback from the personal interviews.

"I started out wanting a particular company now I'm just about ready — to settle for anything absolutely ready — to settle for anything," said, sighing. "It's a real challenge."

No. 2 in line called the ordinary winning process, to separate the wheat from the chaff. Others called it a result of media scare tactics about the market, and an inefficient atrocity.

But Shingleton says he has repeatedly studied the efficiency of the system concerned students and found the system, used at MSU for at least a decade, to be the most comprehensible, the most and the most accessible to all students.

Though they complain, most of the students agree there is no better alternative, and accept both its benefits and weaknesses placidly.

"I oughta get a job outa all this, but I don't I'll just have to join the Navy," Fred Moeckel, a senior in electrical engineering, said.

Pat McNeil, a marketing senior, said the basement below the Placement Services is in gray slacks, pale yellow shirt, tweed jacket, amidst blue-jeaned fellows on the floor.

"What alternative is there?" he asked. "Resumes? I tried that. It doesn't work. You get a letter that says 'We have positions open' and that's the way it could be God and it wouldn't make a difference."

"This is not much better, but at least it's face-to-face contact. Really, it's a little dog that you get to jump through the hoop, then you give it a little snack."

"There are very few snacks left, but you gotta get 'em while you can."

"This is like life, it's like that," said a student who had waited for nothing but a tiger. "You gotta push."

"Really, it's like a little dog that you get to jump through a hoop, then you give it a little snack at the end. There are very few snacks left, so you gotta get 'em while you can."

Shingleton arranged for the doors to open an hour earlier for the rest of the term after a reporter's inquiry Monday.

It's all part of the game, they say, of getting a job, and getting a good one.

Kenneth William Shorkey II, for example, arrived at 5:05, and was the 12th in line. Glancing over the line in front of him he shrugged and said: "Doesn't look like there's too many business people here yet, so I don't have to worry."

As the line formed rapidly behind him, he sat cross-legged on the floor, carefully signing his full name to a stack of individually-typed letters he was sending seek an interview with a company that is asking for just about anybody.

Most of those at the end of the line have no particular companies in mind, but will take an interview spot with whomever still has an unfilled schedule.

"I had to drop my wife off to work an hour early to be here at 7, but being an hour early doesn't help a bit," said Bob DeLong, who graduated in December with a degree in general business administration. He stuck around to take advantage of the Placement Bureau's services for another term.

He has sent out 105 resumes and had 20 personal interviews, arranged through the
