Saigon under attack: evacuation delayed

SAIGON (AP) — Viet Cong gunners scores of rockets into Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base before dawn Tuesday night, Michigan time) and with ground attacks on the city's evaporating defenses. Airlifts were disrupted by the attacks.

Washington, President Ford called an emergency session of the National Security Council at about 8:30 p.m. to discuss methods of evacuating the Americans remaining in Saigon.

Viet Cong attacks came hours after communist leaders had turned down a South Vietnamese government appeal for a cease-fire and peace talks.

Two American Marines were among those killed in the shelling of the airfield and a U.S. Air Force C130 cargo plane trying to fly refugees out was destroyed.

Sources at the Pentagon in Washington said sketchy reports were received about the deaths of the Marines, who had been on guard duty at the U.S. defense attaché's office.

There were conflicting reports about the C130. Washington officials said the plane was empty and none of the crew was wounded.

Eye witnesses at Tan Son Nhut said the big four-engine plane was taxiing near the control tower with nearly 200 refugees aboard when a rocket exploded nearby. They said the crewmen and refugees escaped, but some passengers apparently were hurt.

They reported the pilot of a second C130, moving down the runway shouted over his radio "Taking off. Taking off." and his plane was the last evacuation craft into the air.

That plane carried about 85 Americans and left a total of 870 Americans in the besieged city.

Earlier in the morning, thousands of Vietnamese and some of the Americans had gathered at Tan Son Nhut waiting to be flown out. The evacuation flights were originally suspended at dusk Monday because of an attack by an unidentified A37 fighter-bomber. The flights were resumed a few hours later and continued until the rockets began falling at 4 a.m., when they were suspended again.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen, asked whether an emergency evacuation order could come later in the evening, said he did not think he would say anything further.

Earlier, in response to questions, Nessen said no additional American military forces had yet been sent into the Saigon area from ships offshore or elsewhere.

The White House spokesman said Ford met with the council for nearly an hour, then went to the White House living quarters.

"I don't have anything to report on what was discussed," he said.

"As for later tonight, I don't have any way of telling."

Nessen said any decision to promptly evacuate the remaining Americans from Saigon would have to await a recommendation from Graham Martin, the U.S. ambassador there. He said Martin would make a recommendation, and the President, as commander-in-chief, would make the final decision.

Maj. Gen. Winant Sidle told Pentagon reporters that helicopters would be used to remove the Americans if necessary. This would require U.S. Marines to go in and secure landing zones for the helicopters. More than 40 U.S. 7th Fleet ships were reported standing off Viet Nam.

Nessen said Ford was handed a note while meeting with his energy and economic advisors and arranged for the council meeting.

Associated Press Special Correspondent Peter Arnett said Communist-led troops armed with hand-fired Strela missiles shot down a South Vietnamese Air Force helicopter and two warplanes. He reported the craft crumpled in flames and plunged to earth.

Saigon streets were deserted because of a 24-hour curfew imposed when the rocketing began.

Viet Cong sappers — infiltrators especially trained in explosives — were reported operating around Tan Son Nhut and one government general said: "The situation has become difficult."

When Communist-led troops severed the highway between Saigon and the Bien Hoa air base 15 miles to the north, they left Saigon with Tan Son Nhut as the only base for large planes.

After the Communist leaders rejected the Saigon government's appeal for a truce and peace talks, high military sources said they apparently had decided to settle for nothing less than a complete military victory.

American, Viets try to flee Saigon bombs

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

As the situation in Saigon steadily grows more desperate, fear is increasing among the Vietnamese and Americans gathered at Tan Son Nhut air base, and anger at the plight of the handful of Americans remaining in Vietnam is evident on the home front.

Flights from Saigon were suspended as of Monday night at 10:30 p.m., leaving 870 U.S. citizens in Saigon.

Several hours before the suspension, an

Associated Press correspondent wired the following report from Tan Son Nhut:

"The panic grows. Visitors, including South Vietnamese soldiers, airmen, their wives and children are streaming into offices of American organizations still in operation here to ask for help in getting out of the country. They think you can do it simply by signing a piece of paper. You can't. It's wishful thinking. They're going to be disappointed."

About 30,000 Vietnamese had been evacuated before the suspension. They all had been associated with the United States in some way and are being flown out to avoid possible Communist retribution when Saigon is captured.

Nearly 20,000 of those refugees currently are housed in temporary quarters on Guam, and all of the Vietnamese who are removed from their country will be relocated throughout America and other Western nations.

The Ford Administration had hoped to evacuate up to 130,000 Vietnamese. With the latest Communist attack, however, the completion of the airlift operation is in doubt.

The operation also received criticism in the United States, as Sen. Richard S. Schweiker, R-Pa., claimed that the State Dept. is risking the lives of the Americans "as a substitute to evacuate South Vietnamese."

"We've stalled this evacuation for at least a week and maybe two," Schweiker said Monday in a written statement. "This is madness."

Athlete's use of credit card investigated

By R. D. CAMPBELL and STEVE STEIN

State News Staff Writers
NCAA Investigator has identified a football player as having used a credit card of a well-known Spartan backer to use more than $300 worth of clothing at East Lansing store in 1974.

Wharton announced April 18 that the MSU football program was being investigated by the NCAA "for certain practices."

Wharton told the State News that the NCAA is currently investigating between 50 and 60 schools nationwide.

Hunt, a sophomore defensive back from Toledo, made the purchases on three trips to Marty's, a Grand River clothing store, using the credit card of Michael Doyle, a 36-year-old Lansing resident, according to store owner William

A regulations prohibit aid beyond fees, room and board and one paid campus. The University is also held liable for illegal assistance from others or "friends."

Wharton said David Brest, the NCAA investigator, Clarence Underwood, MSU athletic director in charge of academic affairs and Hunt visited him during March time. He confirmed that Hunt had made the following purchases with Doyle's credit card:

•Jan. 9—a $156 leather coat and other clothing coming to a total of $199.62.

•April 4—a $78 coat.

•June 4—a $52 leather jacket.

"The money was no object to him. You know it can't be to anyone who buys two leather coats," Busch said.

Busch, who must clear all check purchases over $50, called Master Charge officials who verified that the card was valid and had not been stolen.

Busch said that Doyle called him after the NCAA investigator had confronted him in his store.

"Doyle asked me if I was a Michigan State sports fan," Busch said. "When I said 'yes' he asked, 'Do you want to see athletics at MSU in jeopardy?' I wasn't trying to hurt anybody. I just answered the investigator's questions."

Busch is a University of Michigan graduate.

Doyle would not comment on the credit card incidents, saying that to do so would be breaking trust with the University. Wharton has asked those involved not to comment until an MSU inquiry panel appointed by Wharton to answer the NCAA charges makes a final report June 2.

"It's embarrassing and difficult for me not to be able to comment on this situation," Doyle said.

In his NCAA office in Kansas City Monday, investigator Brest said he could not comment on whether his probe into the MSU football program has been completed.

The Detroit Free Press reported Monday that Hunt said he had played basketball games at Doyle's house in the Whitehills subdivision of East Lansing.

Doyle said that the statement was "totally inaccurate."

He admits, though, that he has helped several players get summer jobs.

Doyle, a friend of defensive end coach Howard Weyers, said he has been to four or five football practice sessions so far this spring.

Weyers was named last week by Detroit radio station WJR as one of the chief targets of the NCAA investigation because of his recruiting techniques.

Doyle, who graduated from MSU in 1960, is a neighbor and friend of Jack Breslin, MSU executive vice president and the administrator for the Spartan sports program.

"The fact that I live close to him has nothing to do with the situation," Doyle said.

Breslin was not available for comment.

Doyle has been a member of the Ralph Young Foundation, a development fund which channels all of its resources into the MSU intercollegiate athletic program, for six years.

He belongs to the Spartan Club division of the Foundation which is limited to members who contribute more than $100 during the year.

His law firm of Doyle, Smith and Whitmer has a group membership in the Green and White Club, limited to contributors of between $250 and $1,000.

Wharton announced at the opening of the April 18 meeting of the board of trustees that MSU's football program was being investigated by the NCAA.

Three days later, Wharton named a four-member University panel to assist him in investigating the charges that the NCAA had made against the football program.

Wharton, who must respond to the NCAA charges by June 2, said the committee's findings will provide the basis for his response.

Two separate reports broadcast last week claimed that Ohio State football coach Woody Hayes brought an alleged MSU

Police warn Lansing residents of con men's flood-victim specials

By MARY ANNE FLOOD
State News Staff Writer

Police warn that not all people volunteering for the aid of Lansing's flood victims are the purest of motives.

Police suspect of playing on the flood victims have been taken to police, but Lansing Police Lt. William Ryan said that everyone they have checked so far has been honest.

Suspected con men have been offers to buy cars and to clean tattered and ragged carpets.

Flood victims were spending countless hours this weekend dragging unrecognizable from their dreary basements to floors, some of them were being taken by these men with their "specials."

One man hearing an offer to clean an apparently unsalvageable carpet for $200, volunteer coordinator Bob Hull figured he had better get the man's business card and report him to the police.

"It was so obvious of a swindle," he exclaimed.

But police say the suspect is legitimate as is a man buying up mud-packed cars. The police have asked that the business men stay out of the area, though.

Nevertheless, flood victims should be wary of people who may see the flood as an opportunity to get rich and get out quick.

An official of Ingham County Prosecutor's Office Consumer Division said he anticipates that some unlicensed fly-by-night repair men and insurance men may soon be moving into the area.

The division suggests these precautions for flood victims:

•Get different estimates for repairs from a number of contractors, and be especially wary of extremely low estimates.

•Deal only with reputable businesses. Get references if possible.

•Check the contractor's business reputation with their suppliers.

•Make sure the contractor is licensed, and insured. The contractor should have licensing card. If not, records can be checked at the State Dept. of Licensing and Regulation.

•Check to make sure that insurance will cover what repairs the contractor says it will.

•Carefully read anything and everything involved in business with the contractor. An east side group that has been coordinating cleanup efforts, put leaflets on every door giving some tips on fraudulent contractors who may soon be approaching the flood victims.

At some houses these leaflets were put alongside notes from businessmen suggesting homeowners call the number listed to sell their waterlogged cars.

Some of the other problems with non-helpful volunteers arose from scavengers and sightseers. East side cleanup coordinator Jerry Lawler said they referred these problem scavengers to the police also.

"Some people were pulling stuff out of the piles of muddy debris left on the road—dishes and silver and things. Some of them were nicely dressed too," Lawler said.

Police also were called when a fire resulted from a resident illegally turning on his electricity and when an unusual number of televisions sets, pornographic materials and other valuable goods were found in one of the flood victim's house.

Humphrey's court date moved ahead to August

By PAUL J. PARKER
State News Staff Writer

Though Lois Humphrey's contract with the University terminates Wednesday, she considers herself a lucky woman. Humphrey's case against the University will be heard in August ahead of more than 500 other cases.

Humphrey filed a civil suit against the University on April 4, charging sex discrimination and denial of due process and equal protection under the law in connection with her termination as a director of the cooperative extension service.

Gary Colbert, Humphrey's attorney, sought to obtain a preliminary injunction and temporary restraining order against the University to prevent them from terminating Humphrey before the court decided if the charges were true. Judge Wendell A. Miles of the 6th District Court in Grand Rapids did not grant either, but set the date of the trial ahead of others waiting since 1971.

"I speeded up the trial so that it would come up in August of this year," Miles said. "We're very far behind and the case would normally come up in three years."

Miles said he was too busy to discuss his decision in any detail, but Colbert said Miles felt Humphrey waited too long to file the suit.

"I was ready on March 18 to file that suit," Colbert said. "We deferred for three weeks because there were negotiations going on to prevent litigation. Humphrey didn't want to have to embarrass the University."

Humphrey, however, is pleased with the decision.

"I think that's very good news," she said. "One would normally expect the trial to come up in three years. If the University isn't interested in speeding it up, then it's good to know the judge is."

"I can see the rationale for the judge's decision. He had pushed another trial from 1971 back so that he can hear ours."

"He realizes the urgency of the case, so that is a very positive thing on his part."

Humphrey expects the trial date to be set soon. From now until the trial sometime in August, she and Colbert will be going ahead with discovery proceedings. A discovery proceeding gathers evidence for a case through the issuance of subpoenas to people involved in the case to provide testimony under oath recorded by a notary. The testimony will be used when the case comes to court for background and as preliminary evidence.

Colbert intends to subpoena about 60 administrators and faculty members in discovery proceedings.

University attorney Leland Carr was unavailable for comment.

Ford blasts proposed agency

President Ford declared strong opposition Monday to a proposed consumer protection agency and called for overhaul of many federal business regulations.

In a speech in Washington, the President told the 63rd meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States that "government regulations have added billions of unnecessary dollars to business and consumer costs every year."

To reverse the trend, he said, "my Administration is working hard to identify and eliminate those regulations which now cost the American people more than they provide in benefits."

A White House spokesman said the President definitely plans to run for the presidency in 1976 and declared someone may be out to sabotage his campaign by planting false news stories.

CAB changes coach fares

The cost of coach-class air fares will rise on short domestic flights and decline on long domestic trips while all first-class fares will climb Tuesday as the result of a Civil Aeronautics Board decision.

The changes in coach fares will range up to an increase of $4 on very short flights to a decrease of $11 on transcontinental trips. First-class fares will increase about $4 or $5 on most flights and up to $9 on middle-distance flights.

The changes will apply only to flights within the 48 contiguous states. International flights and flights to Hawaii or Alaska come under different CAB procedures and are not affected by the ruling.

Doctors may cut services

The House of Delegates of the New York State Medical Society has adopted a plan under which physicians would close their practices and give only emergency treatment after July 1 if the state fails to solve the medical malpractice insurance problem.

The society had earlier resolved to establish its own malpractice underwriting agency for its 27,500 members. Some $3 million has been collected by the group for that purpose, said society president Ralph Emerson.

Under the "disaster plan" adopted Sunday, patients would go to designated hospitals to have their cases certified as emergencies.

"Good Samaritan" legislation also would have to be adopted to release the physicians from liability during the emergency period.

McCord's sentence reduced

The sentence of James W. McCord Jr., one of the five men arrested in the Watergate break-in, was reduced Monday to four months in prison.

U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica signed an order modifying McCord's sentence of one to five years, imposed on Nov. 9, 1973.

McCord, a CIA agent for 19 years, had served about a month in jail before he was sentenced. It was not known immediately whether this time would be credited to the four months term set by Sirica or when McCord might be released.

Edelin returns to court

Dr. Kenneth C. Edelin returns to court this week to ask a judge to declare him innocent of his manslaughter conviction last February in the death of an aborted fetus.

In a brief scheduled to be filed today, the Boston City Hospital obstetrician will ask Suffolk Superior Court Judge James P. McGuire to overturn the jury's guilty verdict, saying it went against the weight of the evidence.

McGuire has scheduled a hearing for Wednesday on the motion, brought under a seldom-used state law that allows a judge to declare a jury verdict incorrect.

Dispute delays Trident trial

A legal dispute Monday delayed for 24 hours the start of a trial over environmentalists' efforts to block construction of a $500 million Trident submarine base near Puget Sound.

U.S. District Court Judge George Hart ordered the delay after attorney David Sive, representing a coalition of environmental organizations, said he needed the time to gather papers "critical to the proper trial of this action."

Sive specifically sought correspondence and plans regarding base construction and issuance of a statement detailing the environmental impact of the base.

Cypriots resume negotiations

Greek and Turkish Cypriots resumed negotiations Monday in Vienna for a political settlement with United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim as chairman. But diplomats in Nicosia are doubtful they will break their deadlock over the future of the divided island.

The main problem is to reconcile Greek Cypriot demands for a patchwork of Greek and Turkish enclaves with the reality of the separate Turkish Cypriot state in the northern 40 per cent of the island occupied by a powerful Turkish invasion force.

Israeli consulate taken over

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A band of terrorists took over the Israeli consulate - general in Johannesburg Monday, seized hostages and fought police in a series of gun battles that killed at least two persons and wounded more than 32, authorities said.

Most of the casualties were bystanders in a downtown street crowd.

Some unconfirmed reports put the toll of wounded — including people inside the consulate — as at least 40.

Officials said they were unable to identify the terrorists, but the South Africa Press Agency said they were believed to be three Lebanese and three Japanese. They held nine hostages, including four women and, reportedly, two children.

In Beirut, Lebanon, the leading anti-Israeli guerrilla organizations either denied responsibility for the attack or withheld comment.

In Tokyo, informed sources said Japanese police predicted that if the terrorists are indeed Japanese, they would demand the release of two members of the Japanese "Red Army" deported from Sweden to Japan a week ago. The pair were caught taking pictures and making sketches of embassies in Stockholm.

Radio Israel said the Israeli ambassador to South Africa, I.D. Unna, had entered the consulate and was talking to the invaders. Unna and South African Justice Minister James Kruger flew Monday night from Capetown to the battle scene in the center of Johannesburg, a distance of 1,000 miles.

The terrorists had threatened to blow up the consulate unless Unna appeared by noon. Their deadline passed before he arrived and the threat was not carried out.

South African Prime Minister John Vorster told Parliament in Cape Town that the gunmen had made no specific demands and "in no circumstances will any demands be met."

"I expect... that the matter will be cleared up during the course of the night," Vorster said.

In his broadcast statement, Vorster said the terrorists were listening to the radio and therefore he could not disclose how police, reinforced by the South African army, planned to get at them.

Court leaves networks subject to anti-trust suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court Monday let stand a ruling leaving the government free to pursue an anti-trust case against the major television networks despite an earlier dismissal.

The court dismissed an appeal from a decision of U.S. District Court Judge Robert J. Kelleher in Los Angeles dismissing the anti-trust suit without prejudice, blocking the government from filing it again.

The Supreme Court ruled it lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Justice William H. Rehnquist dissented.

On Dec. 10, two weeks after the dismissal, the government filed a new anti-trust action against NBC, CBS and ABC. Like the earlier suit, the new action charges that the networks have excluded from prime time all entertainment programs in which they do not own an interest.

In other action today, the court:

- Ruled that government agencies cannot be forced to disclose internal memoranda dealing with administrative cases.

- Upheld the right of states to tax firms engaged exclusively in interstate commerce if the firms derive benefits from the state.

- Declined to review a lower-court decision nullifying a Massachusetts law stripping the State Board of Education of power to order busing to achieve racial balance in schools.

fairs, noted the "serious limitations" of the index and said he would "not make a big thing out of the decline."

Pate said the decline "does not cast any doubt at all on the recovery" of the economy, predicted for the second half of this year.

"We do not think we are yet at the bottom of the recession, but we do think we are very very close to it," he said.

The decline of the index in March was "consistent with other evidence that the economy did continue to ease downward and probably will continue to ease downward until about mid-year," he said.

New statistics indicate economic upturn delay

New government statistics indicated Monday that the economy's expected upturn may be delayed.

The Commerce Dept. said its index of "leading indicators," which sometimes foreshadows ups and downs in the economy, declined 0.5 per cent from February to March. This was the seventh decline in the last eight months.

A rise of the index in February had been viewed as evidence, along with other data, that the recession would soon end. However, resumption of the downturn in March may create new doubts.

The Ford Administration and many independent economists have been predicting that the economy's long slide would end around the middle of this year and that a recovery would begin in the third or fourth quarter. Though there is near unanimity among economists on this forecast, they disagree on how strong the upturn will be.

The index of leading indicators tends to rise and fall several months in advance of movements in the broad economy, such as production and employment. The index is used as a forecasting tool but it sometimes gives false signals and therefore is not considered conclusive.

In fact, the department is working on a new index of leading indicators, which experts hope will eliminate most of the distortions in the old index and will be more reliable.

Five of the nine available components of the index declined in March and four rose.

The improving indicators were: new claims for unemployment compensation benefits (which declined and counted as an improvement), contracts and orders for plants and equipment, prices of industrial materials and stock prices.

The declining indicators were: the average work week, new orders for durable goods, the ratio of prices to labor costs, building permits and the consumer installment debt.

Stock prices had the biggest positive effect on the weighted index and the decline of the consumer installment debt was the biggest negative factor.

The February index was reported initially as rising 1 per cent, but the department revised the increase Monday to only 0.6 per cent.

Legislature studies action on privacy

By JIM KEEGSTRA
State News Staff Writer

As protection from invasion of privacy by state agencies and the business community are slowly continuing in the legislature.

hearing on the resolution and determine the exact objections to it.

In its present form, HR 32 would form a seven-member committee for two years to investigate "surveillance, and the collection, processing, analysis, storage and dissemination of information concerning specific individuals in relation to the right to privacy."

The similar Senate resolution, sponsored by Sen. Basil Brown, D-Highland Park, adds study of business spying and credit clearinghouse practices to an earlier study committee resolution on state investigations backed by Sen. John McCauley, D-Grosse Ile.

Brown, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote the resolution, Senate Resolution 118, to include the five members of his committee and one other senator, intended to be McCauley, on the study group.

Brown also introduced Senate Bill 283 in February to repeal the statute authorizing the State Police "Red Squad." The bill is pending in Brown's committee.

A slightly more detailed bill was introduced in the House April 10 by Rep. Perry Bullard, D-Ann Arbor. House Bill 4923 would not only repeal the 1960 subversive activities law, but also provides that all documents collected by the investigation division be destroyed or given to the person investigated before January 1976.

Col. George L. Halverson, director of the State Police, has said some 50,000 names are on file in the division, which has a budget of $770,000 and 32 employees. Over $18,500 has been paid to 29 informants, he said.

Halverson has said no telephone taps or electronic bugs have ever been installed by the division. Its employees have made 40 arrests, resulting in five convictions and 35 pending cases.

Outside of the maneuverings in the state legislature, MSU associate professor of criminal justice Zolton Ferency has a court suit pending challenging the constitutionality of the "Red Squad."

Action on the suit, now before Ingham County Circuit Court Judge Thomas Brown, could begin in the next two weeks. Ferency said he has asked the court to take supervision of the 50,000-name files and see to their destruction.

Ferency charges the law authorizing the police unit is unconstitutional on the grounds it invades First Amendment and privacy rights. In addition, he said the manner in which the unit spends its $770,000 budget is unconstitutional since it is unrelated to investigation of real subversives, and no state agency may spend money for things other than it was appropriated for.

Ferency said he has gotten a feeling that the State Police is not happy with the "Red Squad" and would like to find a way out.

Concert set for political unit's cause

A concert "revolving around the history of imperialism in Southeast Asia and efforts by imperialist forces against the United Farm Workers in the U.S." will be presented today at 3:00 p.m. in front of Beaumont Tower by the United Front Against Racism and Imperialism (UFARI).

Prairie Fire, a San Francisco Bay area band, will provide the music for the concert. The band consists of a husband and wife team, Sandy and Mack, who play rock and roll music with lyrics that comment on today's society. Mack plays guitar and sings with Sandy.

The concert will include a few short political statements by individuals, but the concert sponsors will basically rely on the lyrics of the songs to put across their message. The group will also perform on the Lansing Community College campus at 11:30 a.m. today.

A cultural workshop will be held in 37 Union after the concert. All are welcome to participate.

Prairie Fire, which was formed two years ago, has been on tour for the last six months playing on campuses, in prisons and at unemployment offices. They are sponsored by the National Student Brigade, a revolutionary student organization with 80 chapters nationally.

The group has one hit song to its credit, "Out of Gas," which is available to a very limited extent locally. The record received its greatest popularity in the San Francisco area.

If it rains, the concert will be moved indoors to the Union.

PIRGIM: military spending cuts jobs

By MIKE ARNETT
State News Staff Writer

Expensive U.S. weapons may wipe out more than fear of foreign attack. The money spent for them may be wiping out hundreds of thousands of jobs.

That is the conclusion of a report released Monday by the Public Interest Research Group in Michigan (PIRGIM). The report was released simultaneously in Washington, D.C., by U.S. Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis. "When the Dept. of Defense gets $80 billion, it causes a net loss of 840,000 jobs nationally," said Marion Anderson, author of the report.

The basic premise of the PIRGIM report, called "The Empty Pork Barrel: Unemployment and the Pentagon Budget," is that a billion dollars spent on military industry creates less jobs than a billion dollars spent in any other public or private sector of the economy.

Whether defense money is spent by other departments of the federal government, by state or local governments or is simply never collected and left in the pockets of consumers to spend, it would create more jobs.

Michigan is the third hardest-hit state of states which lose jobs due to Pentagon spending, the report says. Though Texas and California gain jobs because of high defense expenditures in those states, every other major industrial state loses jobs.

Michigan, with 615,900 currently unemployed, loses 172,000 jobs annually, Anderson said.

"Having those jobs in Michigan would have reduced our unemployment 75 per cent between 1968 and 1972," Anderson said.

Anderson ripped into President Ford's request for an increase in defense spending to $94 billion for the next fiscal year. "The request is irresponsible, with unemployment facing people. We just can't afford the unemployment and inflation that the Dept. of Defense creates," Anderson said.

The PIRGIM solution to the problem is a $20 billion cut in the military budget. Anderson said this would not have a negative effect on national security.

"Security is founded not just on a sound military, but on a sound dollar," she said. "We could cut personnel in Europe and Korea and stop cost overruns without endangering national security."

The proposal to cut $20 billion from defense spending is partly based on a study done by 19 former secretaries and undersecretaries of defense. The study said that Pentagon money was not being spent responsibly and that a $15 billion cut in defense spending could safely be done, Anderson said.

The figures in the PIRGIM report were obtained by analyzing how many jobs are created when a billion dollars are spent on services, durable goods, residential structures and other private expenditures, and also when a billion dollars is spent by the federal, state or local government. Among all types of private and public spending, military spending was found to create the least number of jobs per billion spent.

For example, a billion dollars spent to hire teachers creates 100,000 jobs, while that same billion spent on military industry creates only 55,000 jobs because of the relatively low amount of labor needed to work on most military projects.

The study released Monday is a national application of an earlier PIRGIM study showing the job losses in Michigan due to military spending.

Anderson plans to go to Washington D.C., next week to talk to a group of congressmen and legislative assistants about PIRGIM's findings.

Trying to find a nice day

"Have a nice day" has replaced "This is a stickup" as the most frequently spoken four-word sentence in the American language. Give a waitress a tip and she says, "Have a nice day." "Have a nice day," advises the cab driver collecting his fare. Say, "Fill her up" to the gas pumper and he replies, "Have a nice day." The other morning after I had paid the bakery woman for a coffee cake and been urged to have a nice day, I asked, "Where do I get one?" "What?" asked she. "A nice day," said I. "What are you talking about?" she asked. "You just advised me to have a nice day. The idea appealed to me. I wonder if you know where I can get one." The baker had come out of his oven and was watching as if he expected to hear "This is a stickup."

"This dude making trouble out here?" he asked.

"Have a nice day," I told him, departing. I went to Cromley & Swotts. ("Everything for the man who can afford anything. Bumbershoots, stuffed elephants, decorated rooms and silver bar stools our specialties.")

"May I help you?" asked the clerk.

"I'd like to see something in a nice day."

"Right this way," he said, entering the Day Dept. and taking a gray, windy day off the rack.

"Our standard model," he said. "It has seven bills in the morning mail, a two-hour breakdown in the subway, a traffic ticket, a fresh spaghetti-sauce stain on the necktie and a notice that your auto insurance has been canceled."

"You don't understand. I said I wanted a nice day."

He was miffed. "Our days," he said, "are the nicest in the trade. This is only an average day, I'll admit, but it is one of the nicest average days made, and the wind and grayness are very high quality."

"I'd rather have something with sunshine in it and no bills at all."

He said he had just the thing. It was dazzling.

"Isn't that sunshine splendidly woven?" he asked. "And look. Not a bill anywhere in it."

"I like it."

"You've seen nothing yet," he went on. "Look, it has a trip to the ball park where the home team loses by a score of 12-1. The air-conditioning at home breaks down and when you get back it is 110 degrees in your house and the telephone is ringing and — beautiful detailed workmanship here — your children are calling for you to wire $75 immediately."

"It's a nice enough day," I said. "But not really a nice day. What do you have with flowers in it and a luscious fat check nobody had been expecting and a smile from a charming woman?"

"Our special," he said, taking down a day embroidered with wild roses and popcorn. It comes complete with this remarkably lovely woman in this quite exclusive restaurant and a luncheon bill for $68. And here is a delightful surprise. At the bus stop outside the restaurant door, as you leave, you run into your wife."

"And I suppose, to cap it off, the dog is run over by a truck just at dinnertime," I said.

"Nothing that elegant," he demurred. "The cat comes in with a dead bird in its jaws."

It wasn't my idea of a nice day. "For one thing, there isn't any music," I complained.

"Music," he said. "Why didn't you say so? Look at this." He took down a lovely quiet Saturday. Delicious breakfast. Strains of Haydn on the phonograph, wafted through the morning. "And in the afternoon," he said, "notice the children coming to visit with their electric trumpets, and drums and brand new rock record." The whole lower half of the day was magnificent headache with which he urged, "right after this quarrel with the neighbors."

"Don't you just have an ordinary quiet day?"

"Something with a funeral, perhaps?"

"Nice! Nice! I want a nice day for a funeral! What kind of day are you trying to sell here?"

The manager appeared with a smile in uniform. "Is there some problem?"

"He doesn't like our nice day," said the clerk.

"Really?" said the manager. "We're something particular you had in mind?"

"Just a plain, ordinary, sweet, full, serene, inexpensive, old-fashioned day with no bills, no dead birds, victory for the home team."

The manager smiled through his contempt. "They don't make that more," he said. "Can we show something in a stuffed elephant?"

I walked out.

"Have a nice day," said the manager. (C) New York Times

Minh: hope for peace

Many high hopes held by Americans have been dashed during the long struggle in Vietnam.

As the last wreckage of the American policy in that war-torn nation is swept from the scene, thoughtful and humane Americans must pause to ask: What can we now hope for in Vietnam?

In a way, the war has been a tragedy of unrealistically high American hopes for a disillusioned Asian country.

We have hoped that American arms and fighting men could succeed where each South Vietnamese government has failed.

We have hoped that America's puppet governments, fed with our money and supported by our bombs, could win the support of their people.

We have hoped that the clever diplomacy of Henry Kissinger would create "peace with honor" for us, even as the Vietnamese fighting rages on.

Pursuing such unrealistic hopes, we have been burned, and burned and burned again.

There is but one hope left within the realm of possibility. It is the prevention of massive bloodshed during the Communist takeover.

Two reasons make this hope plausible. First, the Communists are faced with the mammoth chore of governing millions of terrified countrymen. In order to govern, they must win the trust of the people, including hundreds of thousands of refugees who have left their entire lives behind in order to flee the North Vietnamese.

Second, the Vietnamese Communists, who have consistently claimed to be the true defenders of the people, might be embarrassed to execute masses of people in order to keep order.

In order to keep face on the international scene, they may choose to pursue a moderate course, refraining from the mass executions that have characterized many Communist takeovers, and a large part of the Vietcong terrorist movement.

The designation of neutralist retired Gen. Duong Van "Big" Minh as President of South Vietnam may help to actualize the hope of a peaceful transition.

The United States, by acknowledging that we have no more hope for an anti-Communist regime, by withdrawing our advisers and fleet, and by encouraging a peaceful settlement, might finally have a hope come true in Vietnam.

Join city commissions

MSU students have the opportunity to serve on various commissions and boards that advise East Lansing City Council on issues affecting their lives — but sadly, students have not been taking advantage of it.

About 65 per cent of the city's registered voters are MSU students. But most commissions, with an average of five to 10 members, have only one or two student members.

One block to greater student participation has been the length of terms for commission positions — usually two or three years, but some are up to seven years.

Term lengths should not be an insurmountable obstacle, however. An illustration of the stakes involved is a recent decision of the Planning Commission to grant a parking waiver for a proposed restaurant in the heart of the student ghetto.

Students living in the area that would be inundated by restaurant customers' parked cars protested; but the studentless commission waived the parking lot requirement anyway.

On June 30, there will be 29 available positions. They are: Traffic Commission, three two-year terms; Recreation Commission, five two-year terms; Zoning Board of Appeals, two three-year terms; Planning Commission, three three-year terms; Board of Electrical Examiners, three three-year terms; Library Board, one five-year term; Cable Communication, three three-year terms, and Officers Compensation, one seven-year term.

The only requirement for persons applying for these positions is that they be residents of the city. However, the Board of Electrical Examiners require that four of their five members have professional knowledge in the electricity field.

Application forms are available in the city manager's office at City Hall, 410 Abbott Road. Council will review the applications and make appointments no later than June 3.

Council must be aware of student opinions before making decisions, but without student participation on these boards and commissions, students' views may not be heeded.

Grades may hurt education

Every now and then among the books, pamphlets, magazines, newspapers and other masses of material I read at this University I come across something with an inkling of value. But usually, whatever it is unrelated to my class assignments and often scribbled on the walls of the library john or some quote collector's dorm door.

A couple of weeks ago I saw this: "When going to college starts interfering with your getting an education, it's time for you to quit."

Never were truer words spoken, but it happens everyday. It's happened to me. I spent the majority of my freshman year trying to pass tests to get a decent grade. Note my reason: "to get a grade," not for the attainment of knowledge.

A lot of what I studied in classes was worth knowing, but unfortunately for me — and I'm sure for a lot of other students here — the motivating force is the grade. Our preoccupation with getting a grade often thwarts our learning, which is what college is supposed to be about.

I understand that a grade is meant to be a reward or incentive for good performance, a sign of what one has learned. But somewhere along the line we have bypassed the learning for the grade.

Furthermore, there's so much to learn at this University outside of the classroom. A great deal of what I have learned, since being here, has come simply through interaction with so many different people of so many different backgrounds and philosophies.

Our self-development is as important as our academic development — if not more so. The University provides a tremendous amount of resources to aid in learning about life, about people and about ourselves. It would be worth everyone's time to now and then take a break from our striving for a grade and do some learning about whatever interests us.

I'm not suggesting that we drop our books and make a mass exit out of the classroom, though as the weather improves that's likely to happen anyway. What I do suggest for myself and others, who have found themselves caught up in the grade-conscious trap, is simply not to concentrate as much on making the grade as on educating yourself about the world around you and whatever else interests you.

I know that can be difficult since the average student hardly has enough time as it is to do what he or she has to do, much less time to read books and do things for personal development and knowledge. But the time can be found through using time a little more efficiently.

How often have you asked yourself, "Why am I reading this?" And how many times have you continued to read it anyway only to get the same grade you would have gotten had you not studied as long, and only to forget whatever it was less than two weeks later?

If the material you are reading is really not relevant to you or your major (and some of what we read up here isn't), you can always skim it to get a general idea of what it is saying. Then put it down and donate your time to more in-depth study of something that does interest you.

Your grade will probably suffer no more than it would had you read every sentence because often when studying something that is not interesting, half of every hour is spent day-dreaming, running down the hall talking to friends, catchings bits of whatever is on the television screen, or else the material "sings" you to sleep.

Besides, the grade you get in the subject that interests you could possibly take up for the slack in the other subject.

In some situations, grades are important. I never meant to say they weren't. They just aren't as important as the learning itself.

Flood control

A hue and cry for flood control of the Red Cedar River will soon be heard. After the waters have receded back to the river banks and the major cleanup had been completed, the angry citizenry will turn its attention to "getting even" for the costly and inconvenient flood.

There is no doubt that the event was indeed tragic to those who lost all their personal belongings. However, perhaps the greatest tragedy is yet to occur, resulting from misplaced blame.

Will the ultimate blame for the damage be placed on the real estate developers and home owners who built homes on a flood plain because of convenience or scenic value? Will the blame be placed on city planners and the public who demand more roads and parking lots, covering water-absorbing soil with impermeable asphalt?

No, the blame will inevitably fall on the river itself. As a penalty for following the dictates of a man-created environment, the Red Cedar River's freedom will be irretrievably revoked by the inept Army Corp of Engineers.

Little Rock, Mich.

The violence directed against gay people at both Dooley's and Beggars Banquet brings to mind some recollections about my own home town of Little Rock, Ark., and the way it used to be there only ten years ago.

Then the rationale used to bar a minority person from a public place was that the patrons wouldn't take to well to it, that they just weren't used to being around these people and "wouldn't know how to react." This is the sort of thinking that kept blacks out of Little Rock Central High in 1957, and I see it being used again, only this time in East Lansing.

Discrimination for some kind of supposed public good (in this case sheltering bargoers from gays) is nothing new as an excuse given for oppression. In other words, the justification given to qualify hauling off black people to jails for sitting at all-white lunch counters in the early 60s is one and the same as that used to throw gay people out of an East Lansing bar recently.

I've heard it said that none of us are free until we all are free. I believe this to be true. The struggle of gay people for their human rights is not something to be swept under the rug as being a move on the part of sick, bizarre "degenerates." Gay liberation means dignity for people who, like the Chicanos, Indians, women and others, are regarded as lower forms of life by power structure, and are consequently looked upon in such a way by many in society.

Inequality must never become one of those things tolerated in this community. James Green

VIEWPOINT: WOMEN

Fight sexism in the classroom

By Mary Mansour, Jan L. Price and Mary Fiegel

Can you imagine a professor announcing at the beginning of the term that he or she was a racist and proud of it? Third world peoples would be justifiably angered by such a derogatory slur. And yet, many students laugh when a professor proudly beats his chest and says "I'm a male chauvinist pig and I'm not about to change."

The Alliance to End Sexism is alive and well. It was revived April 17 when a group of about 100 women (students, faculty and administrators) met in the Union that evening to discuss strategies for combating sexism in the classroom.

The women present discussed problems of everyday sexism they encounter while in class or on the job. Women are often made the butt of crude jokes. University course material and research tend to ignore or stereotype women or establish the male norm as the human norm. Many women are discouraged from pursuing careers and instead encouraged to adopt the traditional role of homemaker.

Previously, women have not had adequate information regarding available recourse to deal with these and other problems. At its recent meeting, the alliance compiled a list of methods for dealing with sexism on campus.

Resource persons include:

1. Carolyn Stieber (University Ombudsman), who can mediate problems on a one-to-one basis between the student and faculty member.
2. Joanne Rettke (Women's Resource Center) in Student Services Building will provide informal resource information on reports of campus sexism, and a list of faculty, staff and students who can be contacted for support in handling sexist incidents.
3. Chris Wilson (Office of Women's Programs) can also be a source of helpful information.

Or talk to the professor directly, carefully explaining why the incident was offensive to women. Sometimes drawing the analogy with racist or anti-ethnic comments can help make the point. Prepare for the encounter ahead of time; marshal documentation (e.g. class notes) and arguments.

Some students who have attempted a one-to-one approach say it's often fruitless and sometimes risky (one may be openly ridiculed and endanger one's grade).

It is probably preferable to go see the professor as a group. If you can't find other women in the class, bring friends along. Going up as a group lessens the risk and also helps make the point that women have been offended as a group.

If someone repeatedly makes sexist comments, you might seek help from others in the professor's department, such as feminist faculty members, majors and graduate students.

More formal tactics may be effective and often carry more weight than a personal visit. Write a letter to the professor, documenting sexist incidents and explaining why they are offensive. Send a carbon copy to the chairperson of his or her department and perhaps one to the dean. If there seem appropriate grounds, look into filing a grievance or a formal complaint.

Strategies within the classroom include getting together with other women, sitting as a group in lecture; complaining to a group when sexist comments are made; Boycott classes and object to class material which are sexist, and inform the professor (and his or her dean) as to the reason for your nonenrollment in that class.

In filling out the SIRS form, make known that the professor has humiliated and degraded women. The alliance is working to insert a question regarding sexist content of a course on the SIRS form.

Remember to support professors who are anti-sexist, who treat women as full human beings or who are making obvious efforts to change.

'ONE IF BY AIR AND TWO IF BY SEA, BUT EVACUATE SAIGON IMMEDIATELY...'

Senate urged to toughen Interior nominee query

By E. W. KENWORTHY
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate's conventional wisdom is that a president's choice for cabinet or other high administrative posts should not be rejected except for very compelling reasons — questionable character, bad prior record in public office or manifest inexperience for the job.

Consequently, confirmation hearings by Senate committees are usually pro forma affairs. Members' questions are usually soft; the nominee's replies are agreeable and cautious. Opposition witnesses are given polite but short shrift.

Hearings by the Senate Interior Committee last Monday and Tuesday on President Ford's nomination of Stanley K. Hathaway to be secretary of the interior were no exception.

The nomination of the former, two-term Republican Governor of Wyoming had brought cries of protest from national and home-state environmental groups.

They charged that the governor's "quality growth" program for Wyoming had been heavily weighted on the side of strip mining and electric power development with insufficient concern for environmental protection.

They also asserted that Hathaway had consistently opposed extensions in Wyoming of the wild and scenic rivers and wilderness systems — programs that would be under his administration.

In the interval between the nomination and the hearings, several environmental organizations, including the Sierra Club and the Environmental Defense Fund, compiled long analyses of Hathaway's record.

Because of this opposition and also because it was known that some committee members were not happy about the nomination, there had been some expectation that Hathaway would be subjected to some tough questioning on Monday. He was not.

Many of the questions were gentle to the point of being rhetorical. On the key issue of leasing federal oil and coal lands, he was asked if he thought the government should get a "fair market value." Hathaway replied, "Yes, sir."

On the second day, when environmental organizations testified, each witness, because of the length of the list, was allowed 10 minutes. Witnesses for the major environmental groups were forced to condense their analyses; there was little time for questions.

However, the chair announced that Hathaway would be called back on Wednesday for further questioning.

The reason given was the desire of some members to question him on a paper he had circulated entitled "The Hathaway Administration and the Environment — 1967-74," and a critical analysis of it by the Environmental Defense Fund.

A further reason may have been a statement submitted in advance to the committee by lobbying group Common Cause, soon to be read by its acting president, David Cohen.

Among the issues on which the committee should get Hathaway's view, Cohen said, is the leasing of federal coal, oil and gas lands, since the procedures of Interior's Bureau of Land Management "are in desperate need of reform."

It remains to be seen whether the committee on Wednesday will examine Hathaway closely on the issues he must deal with as secretary.

But there is no question that some of them principally energy and water, are of the greatest national import, and that his views are of considerable importance because of his past actions and predilections and because Congress is studying new approaches to the leasing of energy resources.

Since 1971, the Interior Dept. has had a moratorium on coal leasing. Before then, under a "preference right" system, a company or citizen with an exploration permit had the right to develop any coal discovered.

There was no competitive bidding for deposits. The holder of the preference right paid an annual rental of $1 an acre until production began and a royalty of 15 to 22 cents a ton of production. Many companies holding preference rights have simply sat on their discoveries, waiting for prices to rise.

Central to the coal and oil leasing issues are the questions of a fair return to the Treasury, the pace of leasing and a firm schedule of production in the context of a considered national energy program.

Some of Hathaway's actions as governor suggest that the "partnership" he envisaged between agricultural and industrial water users was one in which the power industries would be the major forces.

MSU black fraternity wins regional award

MSU's Gamma Tau chapter of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity was named Midwestern Regional Chapter of the year at an Alpha Phi Alpha regional convention in Kansas City Saturday.

The black fraternity won over chapters located in Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Ohio, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

They were judged on community involvement, dedication to the fraternity and academic endeavors. Gamma Tau gave a Halloween party for 105 needy Lansing children and distributed food baskets at Thanksgiving and Easter. They also brought high school students from Detroit to the MSU campus for a tour and had a commemoration for Martin Luther King, who once belonged to the fraternity.

The fraternity also won a trophy for the undergraduate chapter with the best display, a three - and - a - half foot by three-foot high scrapbook of the fraternity's activities.

They now have an opportunity to compete in the national Alpha Phi competition to be held in Miami during August.

Judge to review busing plans

DETROIT (UPI) — Federal Judge Robert E. DeMascio will begin considering school integration plans this week to decide which plan can best desegregate Detroit schools.

DeMascio will open hearings today that should continue several weeks before the judge issues a ruling. DeMascio said earlier it is not likely an integration order will come before early June.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled last summer Detroit must come up with plans to desegregate its schools, which have a 71.5 per cent black enrollment.

The controversy dates back nearly four years ago, when the late U.S. District Judge Stephen Roth found the Detroit Board of Education guilty of segregating its schools and ordered a voluntary busing plan that was later overruled by the high court.

Dems back teacher strike plan

By JOANNA FIRESTONE
ANN ARBOR (UPI) — A proposed teacher union law allowing limited strikes to protect the public interest even though it was written in secret by special interest groups, Democratic legislative leaders said Monday.

The plan was hashed out in 60 hours of behind-door debate last week by the Michigan Education Assn., Federation of Teachers, Assn. of School Boards and Assn. of School Administrators.

Both groups were asked to write the proposal when the Democrat - controlled legislature deadlocked on the question and unable to write a bill itself.

House Speaker Bobby D. Crim, D - Ann Arbor, and Senate Majority Leader Sam B. Fitzgerald, D - Detroit, unveiled

the negotiations mechanism to reporters Monday and said they are optimistic it can be enacted by June 1.

"It will protect the public interest," Fitzgerald said.

"The framework will keep the public interest in mind, the children in school and give some recognition that those who join together have a right to bargaining together," he added.

Though it had not been formally drafted and details were sketchy, the proposal basically calls for 180 days of instruction, plus two teacher conference days and 14 holidays to be completed by the third Friday in June.

Teachers, upon a 15-day notice, would be permitted to strike, though they would forfeit a day's pay for each day that bites into the 196 - day calendar. School districts would likewise lose a day's state aid for each day of the teachers' strike.

If a strike trimmed the school instruction calendar to 170 days, a Circuit Court judge could order teachers back to their classrooms and throw the dispute to a third party for binding arbitration or to the Michigan Employment Security Commission for resolution.

Crim said the prospect of a limited teacher strike and financial penalties would coax school boards to the negotiating table while preventing prolonged walkouts.

Teachers disobeying a court back - to - work order could be fired.

Legislative OK expected soon of Ford's evacuation authority

By WALTER TAYLOR Washington Star

WASHINGTON - President Ford's request for clarification of his authority to use Marines to evacuate Saigon has rekindled the passions that for nearly a decade divided the nation over U.S. involvement in Indochina.

After nearly two weeks of bitter debate, final congressional passage of legislation affirming those powers is expected within the next few days.

30-year-old struggle in Vietnam will have ended and the question of recommitting troops will be moot.

But the machinations of both chambers of Congress, particularly the House, in considering the President's request have shown that Vietnam has the same divisive impact on many Americans that it did before the United States pulled its remaining combat soldiers from that country more than two years ago.

and Secretary of State Henry H. Kissinger still cling to hopes of salvaging the moribund Saigon regime cuts deeply through the Congress, showing no respect for partisan lines or traditional labels.

Even as Ford was proclaiming in New Orleans last week that so far as America is concerned, the Vietnam war "is finished," the House was locked in a titanic debate over permitting the use of U.S. military forces to rescue Americans and endangered Vietnamese from beleaguered Saigon.

It was clear that many members of the chamber shared the fear expressed by Democratic Leader Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill, D - Mass.

"What happens, if our troops are ambushed while they are over there? What happens if we have troops who are missing in action?" O'Neill asked.

He quoted from a newspaper clipping that said California officials are making preparations to receive from 600,000 to 1 million Southeast Asian refugees.

"Do any of us think for one minute that we can evacuate 600,000 to 1 million (refugees) without being back in the quagmire that we were in four years ago, six years ago, eight years ago?" he asked.

"There is no way you can do it," was O'Neill's answer to his own question.

For many of the 92 freshmen members of the House, some of whom got their start in politics on the front lines of the anti-war movement, the question was one of the most difficult they will be asked to face as legislators.

"I've been fighting against this (bleeping) war for 10 (bleeping) years," Rep. John L. Burton, one freshman leader, told a reporter outside the chamber. "Now I'm supposed to vote to send the Marines back in."

Burton, D - Calif., whose brother Phillip is chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, led an unsuccessful 15 - hour parliamentary fight to prevent enactment of the evacuation bill.

Allied with him were many of the established House doves of the 1960s and early 1970s, some of whom were instrumental in the passage of several war measures in 1970. Bella S. Abzug, D - Mass., Elizabeth Holtzman, D - N.Y., John F. Sierberling, D - N.Y., Donald W. Riegle, D - Mich., and Paul N. McCloskey, Calif.

"Once we send military forces back over there we are launched on a course of uncharted sea, and we have no way of knowing when we are going to be able to get forces back home," Sierberling asserted.

Riegle characterized the authorization as a "blank check" that the President could use to launch offensive actions against the North Vietnamese.

For the most part, members of the House of the past had been most keen in support of the effort left the debate to Lend-A-Hand fund collection points set

The MSU Businesswomen's Club has set up two collection points on campus for anyone wishing to donate money to the Lend-A-Hand Relief Fund for flood victims between now and May 15.

Checks made out to the MSU Businesswomen's Club Flood Relief may be mailed or delivered to Darlene Dreps, 140 Administration Bldg., or Debbie Kenrick, Service Road, Purchasing Dept.

The MSU Businesswomen's Club kicked off this latest campus drive by pledging $100 to the fund.

ASMSU, the Residence Halls Assn. (RHA) and the Council of Graduate Students (COGS) have been collecting canned goods and checks for a week for the Red Cross.

So far, $55 and some clothing has been donated through this collection point.

Netters lose title; Selke wins

By ANN WILLIAMSON
State News Sports Writer
Sometimes you just have to take the good with the bad, and the MSU women's tennis team took a little of both last weekend in Madison, Wis., at the Big Ten championships.

The Spartans, after winning the Big Ten title for the past two years, were forced to hand the crown over to rival Ohio State, who took the championship with 66 points. MSU finished second with 58 points, while a surprising Wisconsin squad landed third place with 45 points.

"We don't have any excuses as a team for coming in second place, because we played good and hard tennis," Spartan coach Elaine Hatton explained. "We went undefeated up to the finals competition, but once we got into the finals we just couldn't come up with another win."

"We did everything just the way we should have, but Ohio State's team was just a little better than we were. We lost fairly and squarely."

But the news was not all bad. Senior Sue Selke, Big Ten singles champion in the No. 1 position for the past two consecutive years, claimed the title once again as she whipped OSU's Ann Wilson, 6-3, 6-3. Wilson had defeated Selke earlier this season in a dual meet, breaking Selke's three-year undefeated record in singles play.

"Sue played the most beautiful match of tennis I've ever seen her play in her entire career," Hatton praised. "She was very determined and confident that she was going to beat Ann Wilson, and didn't make the little mistakes that she made against her earlier this season."

"I do think that was the best tennis I've ever played," Selke added. "I tried to force Wilson to make the mistakes, and once she did, I didn't let up on her. I know I had a lot of confidence in myself."

Though seven Spartans qualified for the finals competition, it was either an Ohio State or a Wisconsin player who came out on top at the conclusion of the matches.

Senior Allison Scruggs was handed a loss by OSU's Barbara Wetters in the No. 4 singles position, marking the first time in two years that Scruggs has not won the Big Ten title at that position.

Becky Dickieson and Jo Bock also had their Big Ten crowns robbed from them by the No. 3 doubles position, as they lost to Wisconsin's Bachman and Cindy Bock, 6-3, 6-3.

Finishing behind OSU, Michigan and Wisconsin in team standings were Purdue with 50 points, Michigan with 48, Illinois with 16, Indiana with 10, Minnesota with 10 and Northwestern with 10.

"Pleasure" favored in Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — W. E. "Smiley" Adams leaned against the wall of barn 26 at Churchill Downs Monday morning and got down to the business of handicapping Saturday's 101st running of the Kentucky Derby.

Of course, as trainer of Master Derby, Adams has a slight bias.

The aptly nicknamed trainer said: "I've seen all the horses except Diabolo. He's a good horse, but he ain't going to run no 1:46 here. No one is."

Adams was referring to the 1:46 3-5 time turned in by Frank McMahon's Damascus colt in winning the 1 and one-eighth mile California Derby.

Looking over the past performances of the probable Derby field, the crewcut Adams broke into an even wider grin and slowly pointed to Foolish Pleasure's chart.

"He looks like the horse to me," Adams said. "Too honest. He's going to run his race every time, he's got to be the one to beat. He's consistent, you know he's going to be there."

While Adams was studying the past performances of his competition in the $125,000-added, 1 1/8 mile derby, Master Derby was being strolled around the barn after a gallop around the track.

Women's softball team meets Calvin on road

The MSU women's softball team will travel to Grand Rapids this afternoon to face Calvin College in doubleheader competition. The Spartans, who boast an 8-1 season record, whipped Calvin last week in a single home game, 25-4. MSU coach Margo Snively is again predicting that the Spartans "should win easily."

Gloria Becksford, 5-0 for the season, will start for the Spartans in the first game, while Gwen White will get the bid for the Spartans in the second game. White currently holds a 3-1 mark for the season.

IM NOTES

The women's intramural track meet scheduled Monday night was cancelled because of wet grounds. The entry deadline has been extended to 10 a.m. of the day the meet will be held. For information on the rescheduling call 355-4710.

Albion games canceled

Monday's rescheduled MSU baseball games at Albion were canceled because of rain. MSU originally was supposed to meet the Bisons here April 8, but the doubleheader was postponed because of snow.

The batsmen will meet Notre Dame twice today in South Bend, Ind.

Hard-pressed drinkers hike beer sales

By BRIAN HOUGH
State News Staff Writer

Michigan drinkers are drowning their sorrows in beer suds because the economic conditions which are driving them to drink are also making the price of real firewater too prohibitive.

Volume sales of beer rose 5.6 per cent, while hard liquor sales increased only 1 per cent between fiscal 1973 and 1974.

Per capita beer consumption for fiscal 1974 was 20.37 gallons and 1.85 gallons for hard liquor, according to the Michigan Liquor Control Commission.

"People are picking up a six-pack instead of a pint," said Richard Newell, business manager of the commission. "We believe it's due to purely economic factors."

Michigan downed an impressive total of 7,086,000 cases of liquor and 6,806,000 barrels of beer last year.

Dooley's reported that its 1974 sales of beer and hard liquor were higher than in 1973, with beer showing the greater increase. Special deals on beer may have been responsible.

Michigan drinkers are not alone in pushing alcohol consumption levels up. The Distilled Spirits Council, a trade association of the nation's liquor industry, says consumption of alcohol rose 2.3 per cent in 1974 for the nation.

Its report said that per capita adult consumption of alcohol was 3.11 gallons in 1974. This was an increase of .07 gallons from 1973.

However, consumers spent a smaller percentage of their disposable income on liquor in 1974 than they have in any year since the Great Depression.

That does not mean that people do not drink during the Depression era. It means that they spent less money on alcohol. From 1934 to 1935 per capita consumption jumped 52 per cent.

The retail value of hard liquor in Michigan in 1974 was $371.5 million compared to $358.7 million in 1973. Tax revenues generated by liquor amounted to $42.2 million for the state, a 3.7 per cent increase from last year.

Liquor sales serve as a very useful indicator of economic health. They are because people are making more money and want to treat their tonsils or because they want to drink and forget they are getting any richer. In either case distilleries and breweries stay in business.

Chrysler offers $200 rebates starting Thursday on '75 cars

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. will give $200 rebates to buyers of new Dodge and Plymouth compact cars beginning on Thursday.

The sales campaign, which is not immediately being matched by other car companies, is scheduled to run through May.

Dealers said Chrysler also will offer $200 rebates on three small truck models: the Dodge Tradesman van, Dodge Sportsman Wagon and the Plymouth Voyager.

Sales Vice President R. D. McLaughlin said the firm hopes another round of rebates will boost sales, and noted, "April sales are such that we need a stimulant."

Other auto companies would not commit themselves to even limited price cutting. "Frankly, they're in much worse shape than we are," one official said. "They really didn't have much choice."

During the most recent sales period, Chrysler deliveries were off 41 per cent, compared to a 24 per cent drop at Ford Motor Co. and a 7 per cent decline at General Motors and American Motors.

"We can't do this forever, but this will stimulate our sales and bring some of our employees back to work," McLaughlin said. He said resumption of rebate is an effort to take advantage of personal income bolstered by federal income tax rebates.

Dealers said Chrysler will pay the rebate to buyers of 1975 Dodge Darts, Plymouth Valiants or Plymouth Dusters. According to a radio ad, the models must already be in dealer stock.

Chrysler kicked off the initial Big Three rebate campaigns early this year, but the others apparently are not eager to do it again.

"We have no plans for a rebate program," said a General Motors spokesman. A Ford spokesman said the firm also has no plans to resume rebate programs.

Both companies will study the effect of Chrysler's action on their own sales. Chrysler gains a competitive edge and GM will have to match the same.

Justice Dept. operates witness relocation plan

By ORR KELLY
Washington Star

WASHINGTON — That new family moving in down the street. Who are they?

The odds are that they are just a normal American family setting up housekeeping in a new community or neighborhood. But twice each day, on the average, a family with an entirely new identity — furnished by the federal government — moves into a new neighborhood to begin a new life.

The new identity is days, perhaps only hours, old. Children are good at playing this game, but they may have trouble remembering their new names when they go off to school.

The witness relocation program, operated for the Justice Dept. by the U.S. Marshal's Service, began almost by accident seven years ago. Since then, it has burgeoned into an $11 million-a-year operation that will move some 700 witnesses and their families to new homes this year.

Federal prosecutors say that the program, which reportedly has a perfect batting average so far for protecting witnesses from retaliation, has been a key element in the government's effort to crack down on organized crime.

For the witnesses, the program offers a high degree of protection from a threat that has been demonstrated repeatedly.

In Las Vegas recently, a man was offered a chance to assume a new identity, but refused it. When he opened the door of his motel room, he was decapitated by a blast from a shotgun.

A New England lawyer was warned that his life was in danger, but refused to move to another city. A bomb planted in his car exploded when he turned the ignition key, crippling him for life.

Linda Kuzmack, an aide to Gerald Shur, who runs the Criminal Division's part of the operation in the Justice Dept., recalled another case.

"Shall we tell him about the doorknob?" she asked Shur. "This guy had been relocated safely," Shur said. "But there was a death in his family and the marshals took him back to his old home city to the funeral. When it was over, he was told to go to his new home. Instead, he went back to where he used to live. When he turned the doorknob, a bomb went off and killed him."

John Cameron, associate director of the Marshal's Service in charge of witness security, emphasized in an interview that instances in which witnesses have been harmed — through their failure to take the advice of the marshals — were rare exceptions, and in no case had a witness' enemies succeeded in tracking him down and harming him.

In most cases, he said, the more than 1,100 witnesses given new identities so far are safe and, in some cases, prosperous.

But getting into the program can be an abrupt and traumatic episode for a family.

Often, Shur said, a person with knowledge about a crime will suddenly agree to tell what he or she knows in a meeting with a U.S. attorney or a lawyer for an organized crime strike force.

A single call to Cameron's office in Falls Church, Va., can provide immediate protection before the witness leaves the prosecutor's office.

But before a person can be taken into the program, approval from an assistant attorney general is needed, since each case may involve spending several thousand dollars.

The marshals immediately move the person to a so-called safe house, where a special guard is not needed, and one of Cameron's 15 relocation specialists moves in to learn everything he needs to know to make the change in identity successful.

"First we put him into a safe area, check his background, education, any medical problems. We go into everything that might be a problem to him or to us in his new location," Cameron said.

In cases where the danger seems great, the witness may be whisked off to a safe place while a marshal goes to his home, gets his wife and picks up the family's children at school.

"They just do not go back home. It's just that quick," Cameron said. And though Cameron tends to talk of "he" and "him," many women witnesses have been relocated, and in some cases, both a husband and wife have been witnesses.

In one recent case, he said, a husband and wife were relocated from Gary, Ind., to Fort Worth, Tex. The husband got involved with a truck hijacking gang and was killed by his new associates. For protection, his wife was moved a second time and given still another new identity.

In every relocation, Cameron said, one of the first steps is to arrange to have the names of the family members legally changed so that when they tell people their new names they will be telling the truth.

Then comes the question of where they can safely move and make a living.

Sometimes, Cameron said, the fact that a person has agreed to testify in one trial may put him in danger from many others who fear he may also tell what he knows about them. One of the biggest jobs of the relocation specialists is to ferret out these other sources of danger.

When a witness arrives in his new community, he has far less plastic in his wallet than most people in our credit card society. The marshals arrange for a Social Security card in his new name and a driver's license if he had a valid one before, but they provide only the minimum necessary for the witness to get by in his new life.

If the witness had a college degree or a professional license, the marshals will provide him with credentials in his new name. But they will not provide him with anything he did not legitimately have before. And they will not help him establish a charge account or get a credit card even if he had credit and credit cards before.

In addition to his new identity and help in finding a job, the witness gets a place to live and subsistence payments of up to $1,000 a month (more in exceptional circumstances).

Cameron's goal is to process each witness, from the relocation specialist's first talks with him to the time his subsistence payments end, within 90 days. In some cases, however, especially when the witness must return frequently to what Cameron refers to as the "danger area" for court appearances, the period may run significantly longer.

Ben-Veniste to talk here

Richard Ben-Veniste, former assistant to Watergate Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, will make two speaking appearances at MSU Thursday.

ASMSU's Great Issues is sponsoring Ben-Veniste's visit in conjunction with Law Day, which is Thursday.

Ben-Veniste will speak at 3:30 p.m. in the Erickson Hall kiva. Appearing with him will be Zolton Ferency, associate professor of criminal justice. They will speak on white collar crime and campaign contributions.

Ben-Veniste will speak by himself at 8:15 p.m. in the Fairchild Theater. The topic of his speech will be "Relationships of White Collar Crime and Prosecutions on Society."

The afternoon appearance is free to all MSU students. The evening speech is free to MSU students with ID's, but there is a $1 admission charge for nonstudents.

From the muck and mire and semidistasteful refuse of an April flood emerge April flowers. These hardy specimens sprang from their spring splendor recently, bringing a happy note to MSU's not-so-long-ago water-soaked campus.
