Over 35 teams competed in this week's annual Greek Week tug-of-war. Sweating and straining, the teams worked their ways to the end through double elimination. Tired from the first tests but not ready to give up the fight, the 10-woman Phi Mu and 2,000-pound Sigma Chi teams won the finals. At the end of the week, a tally of each house's points for placing in the week's events will determine the Greek Week trophy winner.

MICHIGAN MAY LEGALIZE DRUG SOON

Debate over Laetrile continues

By MIKE MACKSOOD
State News Staff Writer

Debate over the value of laetrile as a cancer treatment has been raging for some time. The drug has become a household word.

Laetrile is basically a compound made up of two units. One unit is a glucose unit with an organic acid function substituted on carbon six. The other unit is a cyanide containing molecule which is hooked to the glucose unit by a beta glycosidic linkage.

The theory of laetrile proponents is that cancer cells contain an enzyme which is specific to the beta linkage of laetrile.

According to the theory, the laetrile molecule gets into cancer cells where the laetrile specific enzyme would cause the molecule to separate (hydrolyze) and free hydrocyanic acid, which destroys the cancer cell.

So far there has been no scientific evidence found to support this theory. Laetrile proponents also contend that the drug is a vitamin which they have named B17. But scientists say they find no valid basis for believing laetrile to be a vitamin.

Olaf Mickelsen, professor of food science and human nutrition, said a vitamin is an organic substance required in the diet because it can not be produced in the body.

"All the evidence I've read gives no indication that laetrile is required by any animal system," Mickelsen said.

He said laetrile is not a vitamin as laetrile proponents claim.

Tests conducted as recently as last fall have still not been able to find any proof that laetrile is an effective drug in the treatment of cancer.

Thursday, a look at the most recent results of tests on laetrile and the opinions of cancer experts on the drug.

When strict law enforcement is applied to one part of Lansing, the business merely shifts to another area. Four years ago Reutter Park, next to the Capitol, was an active area for prostitution. Pressure on the streetwalkers forced them to move to the west side of the city. The building of 1496 and urban renewal cleared out many of the boarding houses and businesses in that section of Lansing and the trade is now moving into the east side of the city.

"If the law is enforced hard enough, the pimps will change the area for their workers," Doug Williams, Lansing police detective, said. "But some areas are just naturally lucrative — Michigan Avenue — and they will never be cleared out of there."

To make an arrest, an undercover policeman must be approached by the prostitute and be told what she will do and for how much. The policeman can contact a suspect for conversation, but eventually whatever method he uses to arrest her will be questioned in court.

In court the defendant and her lawyer will usually attack the credibility of the arresting officer with the case boiling down to a one-to-one confrontation.

"The laws on the books for soliciting are substantial," Williams said, "but it is difficult to prosecute because of plea-bargaining and the inconstant penalties for the crime."

The City of Lansing has a choice, however. It can prosecute a person criminally with a charge of soliciting or civilly if she has been accepting welfare while working.

During one particular study, Williams discovered 31 of the 58 prostitutes he had

"We turned a lot of this sort of information over to the IRS (Internal Revenue Service) and if they want to file against the prostitutes it is up to them," Williams said. "The question is if we tell a streetwalker to pay the money back, where is she going to get it? From soliciting — and we're back with the problem again."

Other solutions discussed in the past included legalizing boarding houses or zoning off one area of Lansing for legal prostitution. But as one city councilmember

Editor's note — This is the introduction to a State News series examining prostitution in Lansing and the people involved in the profession.

By JIM Du FRESNE
State News Staff Writer

The Lansing Police Department, a group of concerned citizens called the Eastside Neighborhood Organization and the Lansing City Council confronted the world's oldest profession last July — prostitution.

They increased enforcement of the law prohibiting soliciting, revived a 1942 Public Health Law allowing officials to detain prostitutes five days while tests for venereal disease were run and expanded the force of undercover policemen and women as decoy customers and prostitutes.

Now almost a year later, the Eastside Neighborhood Organization no longer meets at the Pilgrim Congregational Church, the Five-Day VD Law is no longer used and the prostitutes — well, they can still be found along Michigan Avenue between Pennsylvania Avenue and Cedar Street.

"Our crackdown was only partially successful," Lansing Police Chief Richard A. Gleason said. "We still have a problem with prostitution in Lansing. Not the greatest problem I've seen, but it is definitely a problem."

"The liberation of our laws over the years has made it much more lucrative for them. How can you stop a business that makes $200 or $300 a night?"

The police could not, and so prostitution continues to exist in the Capital City with the police averaging six arrests a week for soliciting or acts of gross indecency. Despite the arrests, prostitution is still as active and profitable in Lansing as in any major city in the country. Streetwalkers roam avenues four blocks from the State Capital for $20 a trick, "boarding houses" dot entire streets on the east side and call girls continue to earn a living off of government officials and businessmen, charging $100 to $200 a job.

Sgt. Don DuFour, who works with Lansing undercover police agents, describes the city's prostitution as a pyramid with a base of streetwalkers and, as the clientele decreases, a smaller number of call girls at the peak.

"Most of the arrests we make are streetwalkers, who are the greatest in numbers," DuFour said. "The second largest volume are prostitutes who work in middle-class where houses, hotels or their own apartments."

"We don't come in contact with many high-class call girls or hear complaints about them so we usually don't arrest them."

For the past year the Lansing Police Department has strived to control prostitution, not eliminate it. In the words of Police Chief Gleason, the attempt has been "to keep it out of sight and out of mind." But even this is difficult to accomplish.

When strict law enforcement is applied to one part of Lansing, the business merely shifts to another area. Four years ago Reutter Park, next to the Capitol, was an active area for prostitution. Pressure on the streetwalkers forced them to move to the west side of the city. The building of 1496 and urban renewal cleared out many of the boarding houses and businesses in that section of Lansing and the trade is now moving into the east side of the city.

WASHINGTON (AP) — I scream, you scream, we all scream for — sodium caseinate.

The Food and Drug Administration next month will begin allowing ice cream producers to substitute sodium caseinate, a foreign-made milk protein product, for nonfat dry milk in America's favorite frozen desert. The change in federal regulations is expected to benefit ice cream producers and could save consumers about a nickel a gallon on the ice cream they buy. The United States produces nearly a billion gallons of ice cream a year.

The FDA says its new standards are more lenient than the previous ones adopted in 1964 because they let the industry, rather than the government, make up ice cream recipes.

But dairymen are furious.

The new standards "destroy the integrity of ice cream," says Patrick B. Healy, secretary of the National Milk Producers Federation.

"The traditional role of ice cream as a recognized and standardized dairy product and its contribution as a nutritious food is in jeopardy."

The FDA rejects that argument.

The new regulations state that ice cream will still have to contain 2.7 per cent

Revised code draws fire from AAUP

By KRISTIN VAN VORST
State News Staff Writer

The revised Procedures for Dismissal of Tenured Faculty for Cause, up for ratification at today's Academic Senate meeting, have come under fire by the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

AAUP voted Monday night to oppose the passage of the revision and to urge faculty members to attend today's meeting and vote against the proposal. If there is no quorum present the measure will automatically pass.

A major feature of the proposed document drawing criticism was the lack of a requirement that an employee be fully informed of all information in his files, according to Richard Roppel, associate professor of biomechanics.

"There is no way of assuring a faculty member charged has in fact been placed on notice by his administrator," Roppel said.

Problems with the proposed document, according to Roppel, include rules of evidence, the lack of definition of incompetency and no specified period of warning for faculty members.

"Academic due process is followed in internal institutional hearings and is separate and distinct from the due process of law," the revision states.

"There is nothing to prevent the use of hearsay evidence," Roppel said. "Rules must be specified."

There is no definition of incompetency in the proposal. "Who is to say what faculty members are supposed to do? There is no job description that specifically states what it is faculty members are supposed to do," Roppel said.

"This document only applies to misconduct," he said.

Philip Korth, president of Faculty Associates (FA), said the proposal is "much weaker and more vague than it should be."

"The only effective defense of tenure is found in collective bargaining," Korth said.

According to Korth, there will be "no attempt to marshal our forces to defeat it" at today's meeting. He added that the FA's position is very clear.

However, Mary Jim Josephs, chairperson of the University Committee on Faculty Tenure, said the proposed document should pass because if it fails, dismissal hearings will continue functioning under 1967 procedures.

She said she disagrees with some elements in the revision but thinks it "better protects faculty rights" than the present one.

"I want to make it clear that the objections (to the revision) are still true of the 1967 procedure," Josephs said. "They (opponents) will agree that various elements are an improvement in protection of faculty rights."

There are two main differences between the revision and the present document. The term "gross misconduct" would replace "gross violation of professional ethics" as grounds for dismissal. The revised wording would still include "violation of professional ethics" and "refusal to perform reasonable assigned duties" but a distinction would be made between the two in Appendix I of the document.

The second major revision would change the size of the vote required to terminate dismissal procedures. The 1967 document requires a two-thirds majority vote of the Hearing Committee to terminate dismissal hearings.

This means that only one-third of the committee plus one member can forward the case to the president or recommend the dismissal of a faculty member to the MSU Board of Trustees.

The revised document would require only a simple majority vote to terminate

Reps pass guide for spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted a $460.9 billion target for the new federal budget Tuesday, putting aside a quarrel over defense spending and approving figures close to President Jimmy Carter's recommendations.

The tentative budget, contemplating a deficit of $64.6 billion in the year beginning Oct. 1, now becomes an official but nonbinding guide for Congress' spending and taxing decisions.

The Senate had approved the budget targets last Friday. The plan does not need presidential approval.

Congress adopts another resolution in the fall setting mandatory ceilings.

Adoption of the budget resolution, 221 to 177, ended a struggle described by supporters and opponents as the toughest test for the congressional budget process, in full operation only for two years.

The key defense figure is a compromise $111 billion. This is about $1.8 billion under the latest semifioficial estimate by Carter's Office of Management and Budget, but $1.1 billion more than the House originally voted.

Overall, the resolution calls for spending $1.5 billion more than Carter proposed in February, but proponents contended some of his own spending figures had been revised upward since then.

Carter had estimated in February a deficit $6.9 billion lower than the congressional figure. Most of the difference, however, came not from increased congressional spending figures.

Carter asks for UAW support

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Jimmy Carter flew across country Tuesday to urge auto workers to support his energy program and then, like the host of a TV talk show, he sat in a television studio and chatted about such issues as housing costs and health insurance.

He told the auto workers, who have opposed his energy proposals, that failure to save energy could result in "massive unemployment."

Later, Carter sat alone at center stage in a TV studio and took questions from the studio audience and from people talking into television cameras scattered around the Los Angeles metropolitan area in another of his programs to talk informally with American citizens.

From Los Angeles he was to fly over the parched agricultural land in the nation's No. 1 farming state and planned to tour rangeland and a 220-acre farm near Fresno in the drought-stricken Central Valley.

One woman on the TV talk show asked about his stand on abortion and the President told her: "I am against abortion. I think abortion is wrong."

He said abortion should be avoided by preventing conception of unwanted children.

A housewife from Orange county told Carter that the average cost of a home there is $100,000 and asked what could be done about young families like hers who wanted to own their own home.

The President said his administration had just begun work on such problems, was trying to hold down interest rates, which affect both the cost of building and purchasing homes, and told her: "perhaps you'll have a better chance in the future."

In his speech to the 25th national convention of the United Auto Workers, Carter brought up the touchy subject of his proposed tax on gas guzzlers, a tax the auto workers and the auto industry fear will hamper Detroit's production and boost purchases of imported cars.

The President praised improvements in the economy since he took office. Liberal critics have challenged his economic program.

Carter told the 6,000 union members: "We have got to improve the efficiency of our cars. That is why I proposed the gas guzzler tax."

The tax could increase the cost of buying a low-mileage car by almost $2,500 by 1985.

The 40-minute speech to the 1.4 million member United Auto Workers Union was warmly received — the President was interrupted about 30 times by applause. The audience was silent when Carter called for support of his proposed gas-guzzler tax.

Carter's biggest applause, a standing ovation, followed his statement that he was "committed to the phasing in of a workable national health insurance system."

He repeated his earlier promise to submit the legislative proposal for such a system, one of the union's top priorities, by early next year.

The President, who has sought to discourage the use of limousines by himself and top administration aides, told the auto workers that he had ridden to their meeting "in one of your finest products, a very large, black Cadillac limousine."

A melee between Japanese lawmakers followed a ruling to cut a debate on the Okinawa military land use bill during the Tuesday session of the upper house cabinet committee.

Standby gas tax urged by Adams

WASHINGTON (AP) — Transportation Secretary Brock Adams sought to overcome congressional skepticism about President Jimmy Carter's energy program Tuesday by urging that a proposed standby gasoline tax be used for mass transit rather than returned to consumers as rebates.

Testifying before the House Ways and Means Committee, Adams said such a proposal might improve chances for passage of the controversial tax.

Under the original administration plan, revenues from the standby gas tax — if it were imposed — would be rebated directly to Americans on a per capita basis.

Adams said that using the money for mass transportation is his idea, but indicated that the administration is considering it seriously.

Committee members complained Tuesday that Carter's energy program is too soft and has failed to ignite a sense of urgency among Americans.

Meanwhile, Carter, speaking Tuesday to a United Auto Workers convention in Los Angeles, cautioned that a failure to act on his energy program could mean "massive unemployment, crippling inflation, social and political instability and threats to our freedom of action in international affairs."

Adams, noting that he had discussed his proposal with both Carter and White House energy adviser James R. Schlesinger, told reporters after his testimony that the proposal to earmark the gasoline tax for mass transit would show "the positive side" of the gasoline tax.

Carter's proposal for a standby gasoline tax has become perhaps the most controversial aspect of the entire program.

The absence of a program to deal with mass transportation in Carter's energy package has been assailed by a number of leading congressmen.

Terrorist bombing precedes Mondale's arrival in Spain

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Leftist terrorists bombed the U.S. Cultural Center hours before Vice President Walter F. Mondale arrived Tuesday for talks with Spain's leaders.

Apparently unruffled by the bombing, which demolished the first floor of the building eight hours before his arrival, Mondale met with King Juan Carlos and Premier Adolfo Suarez and praised the country for its toward democracy.

He described President Jimmy Carter and the American people as "thrilled" Spain's democratic progress since the end of the Franco regime.

Both the king and premier outlined what they see "problems in building a democracy," officials said, but Spanish leaders were optimistic and encouraged.

U.S. officials said Mondale and the Spanish leaders discussed the Middle East Africa.

The king and premier talked briefly on Spain's separatist problem, easing the first time Tuesday in five days of violence, but not go into detail, officials said.

Organization's annual meeting said WHO needed at least that amount to finance search and containment operations in Somalia, where the disease in its nonfatal, milder form stubbornly lingers. The effort in that East African country occasionally involves thousands of health workers.

Israeli Labor party losses predicted

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli television, reporting minutes after polls closed in Tuesday's national election, predicted a shattering blow for the Labor party coalition that has ruled since Israel became independent in 1948.

It said the right-wing Likud opposition was making strong gains.

According to the television forecast, based on samplings from 25 of the 3,879 polling places, Labor would get only 44 seats in the 120-seat parliament. It won 51 in the 1973 elections.

The broadcast predicted Likud would strengthen from 39 seats to 44.

It stressed that its forecasts were based on projections and that no official vote count was yet available.

There were 22 parties in the campaign and the television sampling gave the new Democratic Movement for Change (DMC) 16 seats in the Knesset (parliament).

It said the National Religious party (NRP) would win 11 seats.

American soldier killed in Rhodesia

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — An American soldier fighting for Rhodesian government forces against black nationalist guerrillas was officially reported killed Tuesday.

A communique said the soldier, identified as Trooper George William Clarke, 28, of Lemon Grove, Calif., died in latest clashes. There were no immediate details of the action.

First reports said he was the second American to die in the campaign against nationalist guerrillas who are trying to topple the white government of Prime Minister Ian Smith and bring about black majority rule. Smith has promised eventual black rule.

Blacks outnumber whites more than 20 to one in this onetime British colony which declared itself independent in 1965.

Americans and other foreigners are recruited as regular soldiers in the Rhodesian forces and are not labeled as mercenaries.

Young meets with guerilla leader

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — Ambassador Andrew Young met Tuesday with black guerilla leader Sam Nujoma, whose South-West Africa People's Organization is fighting to bring independence to South-West Africa, or Namibia.

Emerging after the meeting at the U.S. embassy residence, Young, America's first black U.N. ambassador, said he and Nujoma had "begun to solve some problems of communication."

Nujoma said the private meeting had been "a very useful exploratory contact."

The guerilla leader contends SWAPO is the only valid representative of Namibia, a one-time German colony which is administered by South Africa's white government.

The South Africans have ignored a U.N. mandate to allow U.N.-supervised elections in Namibia, which has a population of about one million. The mandate also calls for the withdrawal of South African troops and for the release of political prisoners.

House authorizes youth jobs plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House has authorized a $1.5 billion program to put more than 200,000 young people into jobs or training programs.

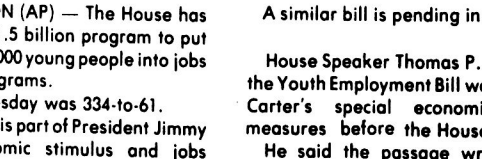

The vote Tuesday was 334-to-61.

The program is part of President Jimmy Carter's economic stimulus and jobs agenda but was changed in the House to inject incentive to lure high school drop-outs back to classrooms with a guarantee of part-time jobs.

A similar bill is pending in the Senate.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said the Youth Employment Bill was the last of Carter's special economic stimulus measures before the House.

He said the passage wraps up the economic stimulus package put before the House last January — "a package that will result in more than 1.5 million jobs."

Move may simplify voter registration

LANSING — A move aimed at simplifying voter registration was introduced in the Michigan House this week.

Sponsored by Rep. Perry Bullard, D-Ann Arbor, the legislation would allow persons to register on election day in their precinct by taking an oath and producing proof of residency.

The measure is similar to legislation now before the U.S. Congress. The idea was proposed by President Jimmy Carter during his first days in office.

Bullard's bill would also allow citizens to register by filling out a postcard and sending it to their county clerk.

Bullard said the new methods, including free postage for absentee ballots and applications, were designed to increase the number of voters at the polls.

Fund-raising program successful MSU receives over $700,000

By PATRICIA LACROIX
State News Staff Writer

Things are looking rosy for those involved in soliciting contributions for the campus drive of the $17 million MSU Enrichment Program, since their original goal of $500,000 has been exceeded by over $200,000.

Last Friday's totals show $700,290 has been donated from 3,885 contributors.

Scott, MSU vice president for University development, said 8,000 pledge cards have been distributed to various groups on campus. These groups include University administrators, faculty and clerical/technical workers.

More than half of the pledge cards have been returned during the four-week campaign, the drive has been extended for one week. This was done to accommodate those who have been unable to return the cards yet, Scott said.

The campaign coordinators felt that more cards would be returned with the extension," Scott said.

The Performing Arts Center (PAC), one of the four projects to benefit from the collected money has been named by 60 per cent of the contributors as the project to which they want the money donated.

The money for this project will be channeled to the construction of the nonacademic areas of the PAC.

Other new projects slated for improvements or construction and their portion of the $17 million include:

- The construction of a new MSU Museum to be built on Harrison Road, which received 12 per cent of the returns;
  - Additions to the Library, including special book collections and esthetic improvements, which received 7 per cent; and
  - The establishment of more faculty Endowed Chairs, which received 3 per cent.
- Contributions not restricted to any one specific project totaled 18 per cent.
- "It's my hope that we'll go well over the $17 million (in the national campaign portion) just as we've gone over the campus portion," Scott said.
- Robert Perrin, vice president for University and federal relations, said it was "a little early" to project increases in the national campaign based on the performance of the campus.
- "The news that the MSU family has gone well over the top in contributions to the campus 'pathfinder' campaign has given the Enrichment Program a tremendous boost," MSU President Clifton R. Wharton Jr. said.
- He added that the "solid support" demonstrated by the donors "can be used to excellent advantage" in discussions now taking place with foundations, corporations and other potential major donors.
- After the campus portion of the drive is completed, the drive will be extended to a nationwide effort. Past MSU President John Hannah has been named chairperson of the national committee. Foundations, corporations and other potential major donors have been approached and will continue to be throughout the duration of the drive.

Public hearing to provide input to board on rape and problem of assault

By NUNZIO M. LUPO
State News Staff Writer

The MSU Board of Trustees will receive input on the problems of rape and assault as a result of a public hearing on Thursday sponsored by the ASMSU Student Board Committee on Public Safety.

Eight panelists will appear with the committee in 328 Student Services Bldg. to give presentations and hear public opinion on the problem.

The opinions expressed at the hearing will aid the committee in compiling a report to be sent to the Trustees sometime next year, said Daniel Stouffer, chairperson. The report will also include research and statistics compiled by the committee.

Stouffer said the hearing would also serve educational purposes since the public can ask questions of the panel. The panel is composed of representatives from both campus and city groups.

Representing the Department of Public Safety (DPS) will be James Dunlap who Stouffer referred to as "the DPS expert on rape and assault."

The Kitty Genovese Memorial Anti-Rape Collective will be represented by Julie Macki. She is also the representative for the ASMSU Student Board Women's Council.

Rick Westgate, who works "closely with rape and assault," will represent the East

Three assaulted at 'U' Library

The Department of Public Safety (DPS) arrested an MSU student Tuesday afternoon at the MSU Library after he had assaulted three people and threatened the life of one of them.

Daniel H. Han, 435 MAC Ave. East Lansing was arrested and charged with three counts of felonious assault.

Witnesses said Han began shouting at a woman on the first floor and told her to get upstairs or he would kill her. He chased her but stopped when someone yelled at him. Later, he went up to the second floor where he screamed at a woman who was reading a book. A witness said Han then grabbed her head and shoved it in to the book. When people tried to help, Han reportedly pulled two surgical scalpels and ran downstairs where one person tried to talk him into putting the scalpels down, witnesses said.

Witnesses said a DPS officer armed with a gun told Han to put the scalpels down. Han ran between the card catalogs toward the reference desk, put the scalpels on the desk and ran away again. One DPS officer and two plainclothesmen stopped Han at the south entrance and handcuffed him, police said.

Han was arraigned Tuesday afternoon and is currently in Ingham County Jail with bond set at $15,000.

Hike in drinking age for trial period OKd

(UPI) — A Senate committee Tuesday approved legislation to raise the legal drinking age in Michigan to 19 for a three-year trial period.

The Senate Commerce Committee, after compiling volumes of testimony indicating Michigan's 18-year drinking age has caused problems in schools and on the highways, sent the measure to the Senate floor on a 5-0 vote.

The proposed change would expire in three years, giving state officials a chance to determine whether it has effectively reduced traffic deaths and high school discipline problems.

Tavern owners had joined civil libertarians in opposing the measure.

But state agencies specializing in alcohol abuse and traffic safety had recommended a higher drinking age. Both agencies found evidence of a substantial increase in traffic deaths since the legal drinking age was lowered from 21 to 18 in 1972.

In addition, dozens of school officials told the committee of rising instances of classroom drunkenness. Many called for a restoration of the 21-year drinking age.

One Republican member of the committee said he would attempt on the Senate floor to amend the bill to push the legal age back to 21, but the majority said they favored the 19-year age and would resist the effort.

Oregon official speaks, favoring decriminalization

By MICKI MAYNARD
State News Staff Writer

An Oregon law official said Tuesday his state's convictions on marijuana charges have dropped drastically since the drug was decriminalized there in 1973.

Pat Horton, district attorney for Lane County, which includes the city of Eugene, told the House Civil Rights Committee that pot use arrests dropped from one-third of total caseloads in 1972 to a fraction of current cases.

The committee is currently considering a bill sponsored by Rep. Perry Bullard, D-Ann Arbor, that would cut penalties for public marijuana use and legalize the use of small amounts in private.

Horton said the Oregon law, which makes marijuana possession a misdemeanor subject to a ticket, as for a parking violation, was heavily debated in the legislature but was not considered controversial.

The bill there was spearheaded by lawmakers from all sides of the political spectrum. Horton said since the bill's passage, no groups have called for the reinstatement of marijuana penalties.

The district attorney said he did not support the issue for political or moral reasons, but because he saw the idea as a pragmatic one.

However, he said he did not think marijuana use should be completely legalized.

"It should not be legalized," Horton said. "I do feel the objectives of our marijuana policy can be achieved retaining the penalties."

Horton said he felt marijuana users should be punished, but added, "let the punishment fit the offense. The penalty should be commensurate with the violation."

The bill's passage, Horton went on, has eliminated the issue of marijuana use from the Oregon political scene. He said he knew of no legislators who were defeated on the marijuana issue.

In other testimony before the committee, a Flint police captain said the Michigan bill's passage would cause problems for law enforcement officials.

William Boudreau said he felt it would be impossible for police to arrest drivers who had been using marijuana and appeared to be high.

"How are you going to determine whether the subject was under the influence of marijuana?" Boudreau said. "A policeman can't do anything — he can't give him a breathalyzer test. All he can do is wait until the man drives away and hits somebody. He's got to commit a violation of the law."

Bullard said he felt there were already laws on the books that would allow police to arrest persons under the influence of substances other than alcohol. He added that he knew of several cases where this had occurred.

Lansing Police Department, Stouffer said.

Donna Tomlanovich, "probably the one to first encounter rape victims (on campus) when they come in," will represent University Health Center, he said.

Ken Smith, ASMSU attorney, will speak on Michigan rape laws.

Author of the "Rape Research and Analysis Report," Janet Leland, will also speak. Her report took three or four years of work in the Lansing Area to compile.

Representing crises centers, which often get calls from rape victims, will be Julie White.

Paul Balas and Michelle Vanderlip will represent the Women's Advisory Council to Vice President for Student Affairs Eldon R. Nonnamaker.

The hearing will begin with opening statements from the committee, followed by presentations from the panel.

The public will then be able to express opinions and ask questions.

The Committee on Public Safety was recently made a standing committee by the Student Board. The results of the hearing will be included in the report sent to the trustees along with recommendations and plans for possible implementation, Stouffer said.

Son of S1: a great victory for liberals

The proposal introduced into Congress to codify the existing labyrinth of federal criminal statutes is a distinct improvement over a bill introduced last year designed to do the same thing. Unlike its predecessor, the ramshackle and regressive S1, this new proposal will not bury civil liberties under an iron glove of "law and order," a la Richard Nixon.

The new bill, coauthored by conservative Sen. John McClellan and liberal Sen. Edward Kennedy, eliminates many of the Gestapo-like provisions featured in the old proposal. While the bill's final version represents a compromise between liberals and conservatives, it is a noble effort to clarify the existing system of laws, which is a turgid mess.

Unlike S1, this bill contains no provision making disclosure and publishing of classified government information, such as the Pentagon Papers, a criminal act. Gone too, is a provision which would have allowed public officials to justify illegal actions in the name of national security.

To be sure, the proposal contains some flaws. McClellan's right-wing values prevailed in the section which embraces medieval obscenity laws based on the Supreme Court's ruling that localities can apply their own standards for pornography. Moreover, there is no prohibition of government wiretapping and no alteration of existing espionage and conspiracy laws.

Despite these drawbacks, the bill is basically a good one. It would make corporate bribery by a U.S. citizen overseas a crime and raise the maximum fines on corporations from $50,000 to $1 million. This a commendable effort at controlling those profit-drunk businessmen whose ethics are questionable and motives culpable.

Kennedy and McClellan's proposal would also repeal the muddled and archaic Smith and Logan Acts. The former prohibits advocating violent overthrow of the government and the latter limits an American citizen's contact with foreign governments. Both laws contain the potential for government abuse and should have been discarded years ago.

The new proposal features a clause specifically prohibiting Watergate style "dirty tricks" in political campaigns. While this will deter those pranksters bent on overturning campaign bandwagons, it might allow not-so-innocent pranksters — those who think more like Bob Haldeman than Dick Tuck — to be prosecuted more leniently under the new statute. Depending upon how the law is interpreted and who does the interpreting, Watergate-style "tricks" might slip through this granny knot aimed at snaring the sneaky.

A truly commendable section of the bill would make sex discrimination a crime under the civil rights laws written to protect blacks. A corollary to this would change the legal definition of rape to include both males and females. Both provisions will be helpful in abolishing sexist barriers, at least in the strictly legal sense.

Another highlight is a provision which would decriminalize the possession of up to 10 grams of marijuana and limit the penalty for greater amounts to a $500 fine or 30 days in jail. Though this is not a giant leap forward, it is the first realistic step taken by the federal government to update an antiquated system that continues to make criminals out of those who use a common and fundamentally harmless drug.

It is long past time that the federal criminal system was channeled into some semblance of order. Where the brutally repressive S1 failed, the son of S1 goes a long way towards establishing a just criminal code that protects and even enhances civil liberties.

Energy focus

Raking and planting has turned to weeding. Early spring's pale green new growth has taken on a fuller, luscious green turning especially fine in the full sunlight of almost summer. It is cool in the tower, much like plant, and from its upper-story windows you can see the inner circle spread out before you. Visitors are welcome and if you go, perhaps you'll feel a part of an even tradition. As the plaque on the tower says: "On this site stood College Hall, first built in the United States erected for the teaching of scientific agriculture."

Yes, the energy debate has been going in and out of focus — oscillating between escapist's world of self-delusion and the discussion of hard, physical and social fact of the century, tourism, is gaining membership, and big car sales rise tremendously to beat the gas-guzzler tax while a MSU energy authority links the current fractionalizing debate of Carter's energy proposal to "haggling over the placement of deckchairs on the Titanic."

A week after Carter's official unveiling of his proposal, the Wall Street Journal editorial, entitled "1,001 Years of Natural Gas," said: "Our own estimate is that the package (of the Energy Proposal) will collapse a piece at a time. This estimate is merely wishful thinking, although it certainly expresses our hopes." The article has debunked but its message of doubt is as strongly etched into our memories as last "Earthquake" movie.

Since then a noted MSU economist has called up to say, "I'm afraid the proposal torn up in bits and floated down the Potomac and we just can't afford that. I've done anything like this before, but if I gathered up some concerned faculty and some concerned students — maybe we could brainstorm on what kind of political stance we could muster..."

Anybody interested?? And of course the U.S. Labor party is getting in the act. Rob Perry's state couple of weeks ago that it is "inconceivable to Mr. Crofoot's mind that politics is the for scientific and technological breakthrough, for material realization of man's ideas" took on new significance when it was learned he was associated with the "Before it seemed merely misdirected. Now the crass materialism of his article stands sharp contrast with his "party's" aims. Are you a Marxist or a tourist, my dear

I attended only Dr. Melvin Calvin's Tuesday night lecture, but I hope it representative of his other two, otherwise he wasted a lot of fossil and human coming here. Dr. Calvin took two-thirds of his lecture to persuade us of what we knew — that there is an energy crisis, with the final part laced with inconsistent little downright propaganda supporting his newly formed idea of tapping producing plants for the hydrocarbons they produce. Surely an interesting idea demands a more developed presentation than he delivered.

But things are looking up on campus. A graduate student produced a paper February entitled "Energy Communication Networks at Michigan State University" which listed 121 people working in various aspects of energy on campus and show they did or did not interact. The work showed that there was a consensus that primary needs wanted fulfilling: formalization of the energy network, a directory produced listing of ongoing energy projects and skills available, and a centralized data bank. Various groups are now working vigorously toward these goals.

And the Conference on Energy and the Social Sciences this weekend seems like an inspiring one. A quote from the preconference literature: "We recognize crisis exists and that the problem involves not merely technology but our socio-cultural system."

This symposium represents a departure from most previous conferences on energy in the following ways: a) It focuses attention on the socio-cultural aspects of the problem. It proposes to examine the nature of acceptable alternative futures from this perspective. b) It proposes to examine possible paths to alternative acceptable futures in the what we know about cultural change. c) It asks the specific question: "What is the University in preparing for an acceptable future?" Call Dr. David Dwyer for information.

But things are not looking up in the environmental context. As a result of a plea that spans the globe, pollution-caused acid rain, over 100 of the 217 high lakes Adirondacks have experienced sharp diebacks in fish approaching sterility. A know something is happening when a traditionally business-oriented organization, the American Forestry Association, publishes an editorial saying: "Admittedly, the global picture is grim. Inference is we are eating ourselves out of house and home relief in sight in too many cases." The ecological imperative is coming home.

Next week: The author of BIOETHICS, V. R. Potter said: "The knowledge and the communication's media (are the) key ingredients in mankind's struggle for survival." It is agreed that the media are failing. We will turn to education's failure next week.

Endowed chairs

Faculty at MSU are often discouraged to find that beyond the confines of our campus this University continues to be regarded as the Moo-U of the Midwest. All our best efforts to alter this image through research, scholarly publications, talks presented at other institutions and professional conferences appear to have little impact, and legislators continue to view MSU in a different light from that which illuminates our sister institution in Ann Arbor. I was, therefore, deeply disappointed to read the list of "top priority" endowed chairs to be funded through the Enrichment Program, including chairs in: food toxicology; accounting; hotel, restaurant, and institutional management; packaging; physical distribution; equine medicine and surgery. Philosophy, history, anthropology, art, literature, chemistry, physics, mathematics — in short, the traditional academic disciplines — have been relegated to the bottom in the pecking order.

I do not know how that list was determined or who advised those in charge of the Enrichment Program. I do know that this priority order will not change but can only reinforce the regrettable image of MSU as Moo-U. I also know that appeals for funds will fall on deaf ears here.

As far as I have been able to ascertain, faculty participation in the construction of this list was lacking altogether or, at best, minimal. Yet, if implemented, this assignment of endowed chairs will necessarily have important long-range impact on the academic programs at MSU. Once again, our administration has demonstrated its contempt for and disregard of faculty opinion.

Frank J. Blatt, Physics professor

EDITOR'S NOTE: These initial priorities are now in the process of being revised, according to Vice President for University and Federal Relations Robert Perrin.

Anything goes

The following, although fictional, is a response to the MSU sculpture students.

We, the people who are responsible for "throwing" Jim Lawton's sculpture into the Red Cedar River, would like to clear up a few misconceptions about our actions.

The question was asked "Did they understand what the artists was trying to convey by his contemporary techniques?" The answer? Yes, we do understand the artistic intent, and fully accept the sculpture. In fact, we are a group of the avant-garde ourselves. We are interested in contemporary techniques of viewing art — what you witnessed was one such technique. As a group, we are interested in respecting artists' works, regardless of however contemporary their techniques are. We only hope that artists will be as open-minded about our techniques of appreciation as they ask us to be about their techniques of creation. After all, "respecting an individual's work" applies not only to the work of creating but to the work of appreciating.

One final note — If the MSU contemporary sculpture students feel that an "anything goes" policy is ridiculous as it applies to the appreciative aspects of art, we will more than willingly embrace the same opinion in regards to the creative aspects of art. In the words of Charles Wuorinen, "How can you make a revolution when the previous revolution has already said that anything goes?" Name withheld by request

False project data cited

By WILSON B. PAUL

The lack of information revealed in State News articles previous to May 13, concerning the MSU-Iran Film Project is appalling. Obviously, James I. Davis, from whom Michael Winter, your reporter, received his information, is a mouthpiece for the Iranian Student Association (ISA) with no factual background.

Winter, knowing nothing about the project first-hand, quoted the irresponsible ISA "underground" as follows: "The film project highlights the ultramodern Tehran, Iran's capital city, while ignoring depriving social conditions which plague the vast majority of Iranians." Winter now admits that the filming has been done over much of the vast country of Iran with little or no interest in Tehran. After having written his first articles, Winter talked briefly with M. Ali Issari, director of the project, who suggested that he get information from people who know both Iran and the project. However, he continued to write without proper information until his article on May 13.

The ISA is a part of an international subversive organization, carefully coordinated and obviously supported by questionable sources.

ASMSU unfortunately voted 7-6 to take up the cudgel for the ISA. I congratulate Student Board President Kent Barry for refusing to support the dissenters and refusing to write a letter to the University board of trustees.

The ISA is failing to tell the truth when it claims that the Shah came to power through a coup in 1953. As Winter finally discovered, Mohammad Reza Pahlavi ascended the throne on September 16, 1941, following the abdication of his father, Reza Shah Pahlavi. An attempted Communist-inspired coup to overthrow him in 1953 was put down by loyal supporters of the monarchy.

In criticizing American aid to the Iranian people following World War II, the ISA is making a vicious attack on the United States and on Mr. Issari, who directed a widespread educational film project subsidized by the United States Information Agency (USIA). Mr. Issari supervised the distribution of films on health, improvement of living conditions and agriculture to most of the 50,000 villages through a 36-unit cinema mobile operation. For this wonderful service, the ISA slanders the United States and labels Issari "a servant of imperialism."

Mr. Issari accompanied the Shah as official cinematographer on state visits to foreign countries over a period of 10 years. The monarch and his aides studied dams for water supply and irrigation purposes, improved farming methods, banking procedures and techniques of industrial development as a means of bringing progress to Iran. For his services in reporting these activities to his people through newsreels, the ISA calls him a "like-minded soul in the cutting room," as he works on his nonpolitical, historical films in the MSU Iran Film Project.

Jim Davis, spokesman for the Committee to Stop the Project, parroted them before finding out anything about the project. Let me correct Davis, who wrote in the Lansing Star (April 22 through May 5). "To clean up the image and divert attention away from the realities of contemporary Iran, the Shah and his propaganda arm, National Iranian Radio and Television (NIRT) contracted, among others, David Frost and MSU to produce films for American use." I believe the Britisher, Mr. Frost, has a contract with the Iranian ministry of culture — not NIRT. Furthermore, NIRT plans to show the films in Iran and MSU will control showings in the United States.

Does Davis, the propaganda mouthpiece for this secret group, not realize that he is doing just what he accuses the Shah and NIRT of doing? He is releasing untrue, unfounded statements given him by the ISA "weathermen" without any knowledge in depth of the history of Iran or the current conditions. Why doesn't he tell us about the phenomenal improvements in education, health, agriculture, industry and progress in the overall well-being of the Iranian people due to edicts set forth in the Shah's "White Revolution" of 1979? It seems that the Iranian students would want the world to know about Persian history, and "its glorious civilization which has contributed so much to world advancement."

Davis has just written to the publisher for a free copy of the new book, A Picture of Persia (written by M. Ali Issari and Doris A. Paul). Let us see if he can exhibit any objectivity in his review in the Lansing Star, promised in return for the gift.

MSU-Iran link deplorable

In 1974 a contract was reached between Iran and MSU under the auspices of National Iranian Radio and Television (NIRT) to make a series of "instructional" films to be used in American high schools and colleges.

The modus operandi behind producing these films is to direct the public opinion in the United States away from the hard-core realities in Iran.

The activities of the progressive Iranian students abroad have exposed the Shah to the world, rendering his regime a very isolated phenomena. Thus, the above-mentioned film project is a very hypocritical effort on his part to brainwash the American people. NIRT is spearheading this dirty job at the cost of young Americans to hide the treacherous and inhuman policies of their demagogue.

Iran, thanks to the Shah, is a country which has:

- A rate of illiteracy as high as 70 per cent;
•One physician for every 3,000 people;
•The migration of the rural people to the cities, despite the so-called land reform, resulting in multiple increase in unemployment rates;
•No freedom and respect for basic human rights, not to mention the anguish and terror let loose by SAVAK, the Iranian secret police;
•More than 40,000 political prisoners under constant torture by SAVAK, plus frequent executions by firing squads, molestations unto death and daily street murder of armed revolutionaries are routine practices of SAVAK to maintain an atmosphere of horror and distrust. An example of this is the recent proposal to execute six patriots.

The Shah's regime has been spending billions of dollars on arms in the past few years. All weapons are purchased from oil revenues which the Shah should have spent for the welfare of the wretched and battered people of Iran. This arms buildup is to keep him in power and also to counteract the liberation movement in the Persian Gulf area. So he is playing a watchdog role for the big corporations, with vested interests in the region.

Taking all these facts into consideration, the film series depicts the ancient and "modern" Iran which are in no way representative of the real living conditions in an agonizing Iran.

It is worth mentioning here the principle matter called policy for MSU International Programs and Sensitive Areas:

"No international would be initiated or executed if it... directly instruments of representative country where liberties of its citizen materially compromised"

In light of this MSU cannot enter into of project with the regime of the Shah.

On the basis of more human rights, we, the zation of Iranian Moslems, strongly condemn film project between MSU. We simultaneously appeal to the freedom-loving democratic people here to support the Committee to MSU-Iran Film Project effort to terminate the

Energy symposium upcoming

By DAVID DWYER

It is now becoming apparent that some energy "problem" exists. Though many quibble with the term "crisis," it is clear that our society, based as it is on an ever-increasing demand for energy, cannot indefinitely and that within the next few years we will either radically alter our use of energy or they will be forced to.

The problem, however is not energy, but energy use and the human social factors which govern it. Thus, to understand the problem, energy must be seen in the context of culture: the social structures and values of the communities in which it is used. We must explore ways in which energy use is interwoven into the fabric of by a thorough understanding of the situation will we be able to avoid being panicked into accepting temporary solutions which enhance the welfare of the corporate few.

For this reason we have created a symposium called "Energy and the Social Sciences" to examine the problem of energy in the context of culture. We have invited people who are not only experts in some aspect of this issue but who take this matter seriously enough to dedicate their life to elucidating the complexities of the problem and to finding an acceptable future. These people will grapple with the following questions in their presentations during the symposium:

viewpoint

- What are the connections between the environmental, economic and energy crises?

- Are high-energy systems fundamentally maladaptive?

- Are we currently at the limit of explicit social organization without a supporting social morality?

- To what extent is agriculture in the third world hampered by the intervention of the profit system?

- What alternatives are available to the present mode?

- What have been the various responses to energy problems in Europe, Asia, revolutionary Third World societies and Michigan?

- What are the physical and cultural limits to alternative futures?

- What is the role of the University in finding an acceptable future?

- What are the processes by which change to an acceptable future might be achieved?

The flow of the symposium will go from the general to the specific, from an analysis of the problem to an identification of the limits within which a solution is to be found to specific proposals concerning what to do.

Furthermore, this symposium has a participatory component, the working groups. Every registrant who wishes will be assigned to one of a number of parallel working groups. These groups differ from workshops in that members of a group meet several times during the course of the symposium to discuss and comment on subject matter presented during the plenary sessions. At the end of the symposium, each working group will make a report to the plenary body.

We urge you to attend and to participate. Dwyer is an assistant professor of anthropology

ROXANNE L. BROWN Pryor: laid back, lively and ready for prime time

Richard Pryor's first television special, aired last week on NBC, successfully defies some conventional television expectations, makes some strong statements about the ills that afflict society and still manages to grab a wide range of viewers.

In his opening skit, Pryor appears as a young, sharply dressed preacher conducting a healing telethon, whereby anyone donating enough money is guaranteed a cure for their ailments.

Aside from the fact that he probably had his audience holding their sides in laughter, Pryor was definitely condemning religious con artists, whose motivation is to make a mint off of poor, ignorant victims.

The actor-comedian until recent years was not known in circles outside of those blacks who have for years bought his records (focusing on black experiences and black inequities) and marveled over his explicit nightclub acts.

Numerous television talk show appearances, ranging from "The Mike Douglas Show" to "Saturday Night," have helped bring Pryor national recognition.

Pryor, who never fails to mention that he is from a small town called Peoria in Illinois, may also be rising in popularity because of his increasing number of parts in films. His latest role in "Silver Streak" probably gave him more exposure to white audiences, since it was his first appearance in a white film.

Getting back to his special, Pryor exhibited that he has access to a great deal of resources, good writers included. Larry Redd, MSU professor of telecommunications, said he lauded Pryor's special because the comedian did not focus on just "self," as many entertainers are prone to do on their own shows.

"It was not Richard Pryor the comedian, it was Richard Pryor the person that many black people identify with for reasons other than comedy," Redd explained.

Redd also cited Pryor's skit on alcoholism (the one concerning the wino, a Pryor tradition), as one in which Pryor did not project self, but instead allowed Maya Angelou's soliloquy end the act on a serious note.

Critics claim the special showed depth, and one critic said the Idi Amin sketch made the whole thing worth watching. Some persons probably misinterpreted Pryor's mockery of Amin. In this instance, one would have to know Pryor to understand exactly where he was coming from. Pryor happens to admire

Amin, but he discloses this only when he remarks that Muhammad Ali and Amin are internationally known and they are both Moslems.

Perhaps the most successful facet of the special is that it illustrated a step in a more positive direction for black shows. There was no attempt to abide by the ratings and create an equilibrium of black and white emphasis. One of the major faults of "Roots" was its obvious strive to balance the ratings.

The latest word from NBC reveals that Pryor will have a weekly Thursday night (9 p.m.) time slot.

Any stand-up comedian must work extra hard and have a continuous flow of available resources on hand to keep from going sour from overexposure. Every week may be a bit too much for Pryor.

David Franklin, Pryor's lawyer, remarked earlier this month that it would be in his client's best interest to continue to feed television viewers a "good" dosage now and then, rather than give them the whole shot for an entire season. This way, according to Franklin, people would continue to pay to see Pryor in movies.

I also feel that more specials of the quality of his first would prove more advantageous for Pryor and would be welcomed by an increasingly larger viewing audience.

Rare Baroque masterpiece graces Kresge Art Gallery

Once considered a "lost" masterpiece before it came to light in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in the early 1700s, "The Conversion of Magdalen," done by Baroque artist Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio, will be on display in the Kresge Art Gallery through June 6.

The extremely rare work, one of four paintings by Caravaggio in the United States, is on loan from the Detroit Institute of Arts. The late 18th-century masterpiece was acquired by the Institute of Arts in 1973 as a gift from Mrs. Edsel B. Ford and the Kresge Foundation.

Caravaggio used oil and tempera in rich hues to portray the saintly Magdalen holding a mirror as her sister Martha watches in awe.

Caravaggio, a northern Italian artist who died at the age of 39, was constantly in trouble with the law in both Rome and Naples while he did his paintings. Regardless, he greatly influenced the Baroque style of the 17th century.

His three other works entitled "Bacchus," "The Calling of St. Matthew" and "The Conversion of St. Paul," depict the religious figures with an appeal and relevance that goes out to the everyday individual.

Kresge Gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and Saturday and Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m.

Guitarist Klugh a jazz wunderkin

When guitarist Earl Klugh was 16 years old and teaching guitar in a Detroit music store, Detroit jazz artist Yusef Lateef wandered in and asked Klugh if he would like to record. Klugh said he would and they did. When Klugh was 17 years old, he met jazz guitarist George Benson and the two played together for 14 months.

Following this, the young musician played with Chick Corea's Return to Forever and later joined guitarist George Shearing.

The formation of his own band, "The Trio," followed.

On Friday and Saturday at 8 and 10:30 p.m., Showcase Jazz will present the 22-year-old jazz artist in concert in the Erickson Hall kiva. Along with Klugh will be special guest drummer Paul Motian and his trio.

Motian's trio includes David Izenson on bass and Charles Brackeen on saxophones. Motian is one of the premier drummers in jazz today and his past accomplishments are impressive. A former member of the Keith Jarrett Quartet, Motian has also played with the likes of Bill Evans, George Russell and the Jazz Composers Orchestra.

In addition to the weekend nightly performances, a special workshop will be available free of charge to the public at 2 p.m. Saturday in the Erickson Hall kiva. Such Showcase workshops are an excellent opportunity for individuals to gain firsthand exposure to highlighted jazz artists.

Since working on his own, Klugh has released two albums on the Blue Note label. Tickets for the performances are $3.50 in advance for students, and $4 at the door.

'Interludes 20-22' to light up Abrams

A weekend of musical diversity is in store at the Abrams Planetarium as "Interludes 20-22" unfold in the Sky Theatre. Beginning on Friday, a series featuring three styles of music will be presented.

Friday's "Concert 20" will feature the bluegrass sound of Michigan Consolidated Grass. A visual show on the planetarium dome will accompany the group. The five musicians will play traditional bluegrass standards and Irish fiddle tunes. Admission to the 8 and 10 p.m. performances is $2.

"Concert 21" will showcase the rock sound of Brown and Bennett, along with the planetarium's light show, Cosmic Radiance. There will be three shows on Saturday at 8 and 10 p.m. and midnight. Admission is $2.50.

"Concert 22" will be the first live classical music program to be presented in the planetarium. The playing of MSU Music Department members will be counterpointed by abstract lighting displays. Tickets for the 4 p.m. performance are $2. The concert will also be broadcast on WKAR-FM, 90.5 MHz.

Council votes on undergrads

By NANCY ROGIER
News Staff Writer
The Academic Council members-elect voted by secret ballot Tuesday for undergraduate representatives. Four of these must be elected to UCAG. A fifth position is to be left open at the all-University level as an undesignated seat.

In a joint meeting including present councilmembers and the members-elect, members-elect nominated for the University Committee on Academic Governance (UCAG) five undergraduate representatives. Four of these must be elected to UCAG. A fifth position is to be left open at the all-University level as an undesignated seat.

Nominees include: Ann Crowe, James Madison College; Alan Wegienka, College of Agriculture and Natural Resources; Frank Marazita, College of Human Ecology; Kathleen Leonard, at-large representative; and Frank Lessa, College of Social Science.

Applications for the fifth undesignated seat are still available at 10 Linton Hall until 5 p.m. Friday. Election results for the Student Council representatives will be announced today by the Office of Academic Governance. New members will work with the old UCAG members to coordinate the other standing committee elections to be held May 24 in Student Council.

The responsibility of UCAG is to provide a continuing review of the Bylaws for Academic Governance and suggest amendments when considered necessary. The committee receives and makes nominations to Academic Council standing committees and also oversees the elections.

COUNCILMEMBER'S RESOLUTION DEFEATED Lansing charter delay blocked

By MICHAEL L. KLOCKE
Another attempt by Lansing City Councilmember Louis Adado to postpone the Lansing charter election until November was defeated Monday when the council defeated his resolution urging the Charter Commission to reconsider its June 13 election date. The resolution was defeated by a 5-3 vote after lengthy discussion by councilmembers, charter commissioners and the public. The June 13 charter election date has been the subject of controversy because many people, including several councilmembers, predict that voter turnout will be too small to be representative of the public's views. The change the proposed charter would make is to add a ninth member to Lansing City Council, and Adado said in his resolution the charter election would be too close to the filing deadlines for candidates. Candidates must file and turn in a petition with 200 signatures by June 14. Adado said that this will give candidates for the additional seat "one whole day" to get their petitions in, if the proposed charter is passed. Charter Commission Vice Chairperson Shirley Sliker said that candidates could start getting their petitions ready and campaigning now. Then if the charter is defeated they could still drop out of the race because there would no longer be an additional council seat open. "It would be nice to know if you are going to be able to be a candidate or not," Adado said. "This further shows that the election should be held in November." Adado also said that the proposed charter was not made available to the public soon enough so that they could understand it well enough to vote. Charter Commissioner Richard Zimmerman denied the allegation, adding that the charter commission has had 135 public meetings in addition to numerous speaking engagements explaining the charter. The charter election will be held in conjunction with the Lansing Community College Board of Trustees election, and Adado pointed out that the voter turnout for this election has always been low. "In the June 1973 election 27 per cent of the registered voters went to the polls," Adado said after the meeting. "But in the November 1973 election for mayor, 36.5 per cent voted." The current city charter has been in effect since 1955 and many of its provisions carry over from the 1912 charter.

Can you be good at something you don't believe in?

Yes. You can be good at passing tests that are meaningless to you. You can be good at selling encyclopedias that you know are inferior. Ultimately, you can even be good at a profession that you don't really believe in. You can be good. But for some people, being good just isn't good enough. For the people who brew Busch beer, it isn't good enough. That's why, at Anheuser-Busch, we persist in brewing Busch beer just one way—the natural way. We frankly believe that's the best way to brew beer. And when you believe in what you're doing, you just naturally do it better. Try a Busch. We believe you'll agree.

Spring drills fun; alumni clash next

By TOM SHANAHAN
State News Sports Writer

Spring football is winding down to Saturday's varsity-alumni clash and head coach Darryl Rogers is in a better mood than he was this time a year ago.

Last year things couldn't be worse for MSU football as it headed into its first year of probation. Rogers hadn't even been on campus for a whole term yet and was just beginning to learn the names of his players.

But this year Rogers says spring ball has been fun for the players and coaches. But at the same time he said the team has had fun and made progress — he didn't offer any empty promises. Rogers may never be known for encouraging the press with statements about the team that still need to be proven.

"We've had a lot of fun and that was one purpose of spring practice," Rogers said. Though he didn't predict any all-American performances, Rogers did say there hadn't been any setbacks in developing the squad.

"We haven't tried anybody at a position and then have him fall flat on his face," he said. "There hasn't been a bit of disappointment."

The play of Leroy McGee, from El Cajon, Calif., has also been encouraging enough so that the staff hasn't immediately moved flanker Kirk Gibson to tailback.

Rogers calls tailback one of the weakest positions on the team and he said he would look at the backs MSU has now before experimenting with Gibson. With just the rest of the week to go until the end of practice, Gibson hasn't played any tailback and has been concentrating on his customary flanker position.

"He (Rogers) was going to see how the backs on campus are," Gibson said. "I think Leroy is doing a good job. I like playing flanker — last year I was learning plays."

This year Gibson, who improved his speed this winter from 4.7 to 4.4, says he's concentrating polishing himself at the position for next season.

"Coach (Ray) Greene (receiver's coach) tries to work with me on my moves and good moves make it easier," he said. "You need to be able to make moves against man-to-man coverage," he said,

Female champions honored for success

By JOHN SINGLER
State News Sports Writer

The various parts of the collage that is the MSU women's sports program were pieced together and put on display Monday night at the third annual women's sports banquet at the International Center.

Spartan teams lost only 20 of 154 dual meets this year, winning six Big Ten championships, four state titles and three regional championships and participating in five national tournaments.

The featured speaker, Joanna Davenport, offered a brief history of women in sports, both nationally and on the intercollegiate level.

"We've come a long way, ladies," she said. "It will take a concerted effort to create programs comparable with the men's."

Davenport is the athletic director for women at Auburn University and president of the National Association for Girls and Women in Sport.

"This has been the year for more," she said, quoting Billie Jean King, "more medals, more records and more recognition."

"We've still got a long way to go," Davenport concluded.

The gymnastics team was 12th nationally. Michael Kasavana, assistant coach, was particularly pleased that his team earned the highest cumulative grade point of any of the 10 women's teams, a 3.25.

Most of the coaches singled out seniors and outstanding performers but Karen Langeland, basketball coach, delivered a message to her team. She reflected on the year past, her first at MSU, and the year ahead.

Golf coach Mary Fossum named Sue Ertl, Joan Garety, Karen Escott, Sheila Tansey and Sue Conlin to represent the Spartans at yet another national tournament, in Hawaii June 15 through 18.

Elaine Hatton, tennis coach, is in her last season. Following this weekend's regionals in Columbus, Ohio, and the nationals later this month, she will step down to spend more time with her family.

Swimming coach Jennifer Parks is also resigning, to complete her education. The swimming and diving team was 21st nationally this year, paced by All Americans Jeannie Mickle and Barb Harding. It was the fifth time Harding has earned recognition as an All-American.

Neil Jackson introduced the track and field standouts, including senior Linda Wilson.

She was named recipient of the second Senior Recognition Award, given for the highest cumulative grade point average. Wilson is a recreation major and competes in the pentathlon.

The volleyball team had a dual-meet record of 41-9 and was seventh in the nation, while the cross-country team wound up fourth nationally.

Diane Ulibarri, who wore two hats this season as both field hockey and softball coach, will hang up the former to concentrate on softball next season.

Coaches introduced the 22 graduating seniors and during the course of the evening, four primary developments of the past year were brought to light.

Besides the glittering success on the field, there was the initiation of a grant-in-aid program for women athletes, formation of a women's varsity club, in large part due to the efforts of Leanna Bordner, and the organization of a booster's club for the purpose of supporting women's athletics.

Linda Smith chosen COGS president

By PAM WEAR
State News Staff Writer

In a special election Monday night, the Council of Graduate Students (COGS) unanimously chose Linda Smith, the present COGS treasurer, to be the new president.

Smith will replace Donald Batkins, who is resigning at the end of this term to take a teaching job in the University of Minnesota's geography department.

Though Batkins will not begin his teaching job until fall, he said he is quitting at the end of this term to give Smith "time to learn the ropes" of the president's job during the summer.

Smith joined COGS fall term as a Family Ecology Department representative and was elected treasurer winter term. She said she wanted to be president because she thought it would provide "good continuity to have someone be president who had been there (in COGS) for awhile."

"I see it (being president) as a chance to see how the administration runs, and since my ultimate goal is to teach at a university, this would be a good experience," Smith said.

Batkins said he learned a lot as president about how the University administration functions, but said he also found his job frustrating.

"All of your work must be done in a year or it dies," Batkins said. "The chance of someone coming in after you and following up on your efforts is low. And the University officials put off approving the proposal or acting on it, knowing you'll be out of office soon anyway."

Smith was the only nominee for president. Batkins said more people have run for president in the past but that lack of time is a major reason why more graduate students don't want the office.

Another problem with the COGS officer system, he said, is that COGS officers are elected in February, while most other student officers are elected in the spring.

Effort was made to change this at Monday's meeting, however, when COGS voted to recommend several constitutional amendments to appear on a graduate student referendum winter term. One amendment would allow elections to be held at the second to the last regularly scheduled spring term meeting. Also recommended for referendum was an amendment allowing COGS officers and department and committee representatives receive compensation if authorized by unanimous vote of the council.

A motion was also introduced to recommend for referendum a 50-cent refundable increase in the COGS tax. Graduate students are currently taxed $1.50 cents of which is refundable and goes toward the support of the Student Media Appropriations Board (SMAB).

Author—MSU graduate Jim Harrison to read from his works on campus

MSU alumnus Jim Harrison will read from his latest works of poetry and fiction at 4 p.m. today in 114 Bessey Hall as part of the Writers Reading series.

Harrison received his bachelor's degree from MSU in 1960 and his master of arts degree in comparative literature in 1964.

In addition to his recent novel "Farmer," Harrison is the author of two other novels, "Wolf" and "A Good Day to Die," and of four books of poetry, "Plain Song," "Locations," "Outlyer and Ghazals" and "Letters to Yessenin."

He is currently working on a comic novel (in the classical sense) about Traverse City, Mich.

Harrison taught for awhile at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, but said he prefers living on his small farm in Leelanau County, away from the academic community. Country people, the small-farm way of life, and rural northern Michigan play a large part in Harrison's work, especially in "Farmer," which was published last year.

Harrison also writes for Sports Illustrated and has written a number of screenplays. He was one of five Michigan artists to receive the Michigan Arts Council Award last month. Harrison has been nationally recognized by the National Endowment for the Arts and the John Simon Guggenheim Foundation and was invited in 1975 to read his poetry at the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

Harrison's visit to MSU is sponsored by the English Department. There is no admission charge for the reading and it is open to the public.

FIRST-TIME OFFENDERS TO PAY $1,000

Committee OKs weapons law

LANSING (UPI) — The House Judiciary Committee has approved legislation which would slap a mandatory $1,000 fine on persons convicted for the first time of carrying a concealed weapon.

Under current law, persons convicted of carrying a concealed weapon may be sentenced to up to five years in prison. But according to committee Chairperson Paul A.

Rosenbaum, D-Battle Creek, "nine out of 10 pay $200 and get a suspended sentence."

Though the proposal sent to the House floor Monday night provides for no jail time, it would in effect be tougher than current law because it calls for a mandatory $1,000 fine plus $200 in court costs.

"That'll have a much more deterrent effect than paying $200 and walking," said the bill's sponsor, Rep. Monte Gerald, D-Madison Heights.

Persons convicted twice of carrying a concealed weapon would get a mandatory year in prison and those convicted of the charge three or more times would get an automatic three years behind bars.

Space program expert will give talk on future

Ice cream fans may benefit

 protein, essentially what is required now. But it permits manufacturers to use any "safe and suitable ingredients" to meet that standard.
 The old standard wouldn't permit casein, which in food products generally appears as sodium caseinate, to be counted as protein, although it is, by definition, the protein found in milk.
 The new standards also permit increased use of whey solids, the high protein products that come from the watery part of milk, to be used to bring ice cream up to the required protein level.
 An Agriculture Department expert, John K. Hanes, says consumers probably won't notice the difference in taste or quality unless some makers put too much sodium caseinate in their products.
 The milk producers predict that's just what will happen and say competition will force down the quality of all ice cream.
 Government and industry sources say dairy farmers oppose the regulation because cheap, imported sodium caseinate will be used by ice cream makers instead of the more expensive, U.S. made nonfat dry milk.

Revised code draws fire

 The problem, according to Roppel is that the revised revision is better than the one it is designed to replace but the real question is do you vote for something that is less than perfect and amend it later or do you send it back to committee?
 The revision was approved by Faculty Council May 3 and if approved by Academic Senate will be sent to the board of trustees.
 According to Roppel, the board of trustees is unlikely to amend unless there are strong arguments in opposition presented to the board or unless individual faculty members indicate support of amendments to the document at today's meeting.

Prostitution thrives

 "Who would want a brothel in their neighborhood?"
 The whole problem of prostitution has to be dealt with sooner or later," Gleason said. "The public has to make up its mind; how much are they going to tolerate?"
 But as Williams sees it, "You will always have a debate about how to handle the problem, just like you will always have prostitution."

Spring drills winding down

 emphasizing the finesse over the speed.
 TICKETS: Tickets for Saturday's alumni game are on sale at the season Fieldhouse ticket office for $1 per student. The game begins 7 p.m. and there will be an autograph session with the players of alumni after the game.
 The worst news from spring practice came Saturday in the team's scrimmage when starting left cornerback Mike Marshall lost his lower left leg in two places. The break may keep his leg in cast for 12 weeks.
 Another bad news, two-year split end Eugene Byrd will be going to Cleveland, Ohio, next week for surgery on an ankle injury he sustained in high school and has played on for two years. It is uncertain how long his recovery will take.
 In Saturday's scrimmage, won by the green squad, 24-20, kicker Hans Nielsen booted a 53-yard field goal.

Byrd readies

 Byrd talks down the other players. Always talk 'em down. You would go out and win. That was a motivation factor for me. To win like Marshall.
 Right now Byrd is winning Marshall. And if you see him on the street, call him.
