Pro-Israeli sympathizers picket Sunday night outside Kellogg Center protesting the 30th anniversary of the founding of the Israeli nation.

Pickers at Kellogg protest Israeli event

By JOY L. HAENLEIN
State News Staff Writer

In a cold drizzle Sunday night, about 75 picketers marched outside Kellogg Center for three hours while members of an Israeli group celebrated the nation's 30th anniversary inside.

Chanting, reading speeches and holding their own "ceremony," Palestinian sympathizers continued their peaceful protest against the establishment of the Israeli state with about 40 supporters Monday outside the International Center.

"The Vietnam protests could have been held years ago in this same spot," a demonstrator said, referring to the grassy area outside the center.

"And their goal seemed far away, too," he added.

Rushing inside the building to escape hand-out laden demonstrators, other students seemed unsympathetic.

Profanities were used frequently as students tossed hand-outs in waste baskets.

Some observers labeled the Palestinian protesters as members of "just another political demonstration," but the lack of support did not seem to bother participants.

"Vietnam has won. Palestine will win," the protesters cried.

"Free Palestine. Liberated Palestine," a banner read.

The picketers represented "Arab students, friends, sympathizers with the Palestinian cause and students from Third World countries," an MSU student protester said Sunday night.

"Palestine was taken over by Zionists and imperialists in 1948 to create an advanced base to protect their interests in the area," he said. Zionist sympathizers are guilty of "genocidal acts which are fashioned after the Nazis," he added, asking not to be identified.

It is ironic that those who claim to have suffered under Nazi Germany should commit the same acts as the Nazis," he said.

"The Israelis learned their methods of extermination from the Nazis," he continued, saying Nazism and Zionism represent the same concept.

The man stressed that the protesting group is not anti-Semitic or anti-Jewish.

"Our fight is against Zionism as a political movement with a racist ideology which calls for the creation of an exclusive Jewish state," he explained.

The native Palestinian said protesters supported a "secular democratic estate in Palestine" where "all people would be able to live in harmony with rights and obligations only to that state."

"We support a state where there is no race domination, no religious domination, no discriminatory domination and no racism in the estate," he said.

"I don't mind protesting for two hours in the rain when people are dying from cold, starvation and the heat of the sun in refugee camps."

The picketer said he was sure United States progressive forces would support the Palestinians, who share the same cause as "all oppressed people in the world."

But inside Kellogg Center, observers of Israel's anniversary did not appear to sympathize with the Palestinian cause.

As the service progressed, pro-Israeli women and children poured out of the ceremony and up to their rooms, passing protesters outside. Many Israeli sympathizers left the ceremony periodically to watch protesters.

An Israeli supporter who appeared angered by the chants of "down with Israel, victory for Palestine," was advised by friends to "settle down, there's nothing we can do."

One woman broke through protesters early in the evening screaming, "They can't do this. This is my country."

As the protest drew to a close, the woman sat in the lobby talking to friends.

"Just smile and say 'shalom,'" she advised. "It drives them crazy."

The two groups remained separated by the confines of the building, although hostile glances and mutterings were frequently exchanged.

Palestinian supporters said they remained strong after their protests Sunday night and Monday.

"Our fight will continue until Palestine is liberated," one protester said. Israeli supporters seemed unconcerned, though.

"We have suffered more than any religious group on the face of the earth," one man said. "We will live through this and much more."

Senate OKs arms sale; responds to lobby effort

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
State News Staff Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Monday endorsed President Carter's arms sale package to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia — transactions the president said would achieve peace in the Middle East.

By a vote of 54 to 44 the Senate rejected a proposal which would have blocked the $5 billion sales package. Opponents of the package would have needed majorities in both the House and Senate to prevent the administration from proceeding with the sales.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, spoke by telephone Monday with several senators of both parties, stressing "the importance" of the White House Press Secretary's statement. The president also talked with several senators by telephone over the weekend.

The administration had lobbied hard in the Senate to prevent the sale.

Clifford Case, R.N.J., responded in a letter of their own, distributed to senators on Monday, in which they argued that the sales "will only make it more difficult to revitalize the peace process."

Church, Case and Sen. Paul Sarbanes,

The sale of jets to Israel "will enhance both its security and its sense of security." — Sen. Abraham Ribicoff

D.Md., were among the leaders of the opposition to the sales.

Sarbanes at one point accused the administration of provoking a needless and divisive confrontation which could have been avoided through "adroit and skillful statesmanship."

But as the debate continued Monday, a

Carter victory began to emerge. Even Church at one point several hours before the vote said "I am told that the sales will be approved."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D.W. Va., had predicted the Senate would support Carter.

Debate on the sales lasted through the day, including a two-hour secret session held to discuss classified reports on the military implications of the transactions.

Before the closed session, Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D.Conn., a long time supporter of Israel, argued in support of the three sales.

With about 25 senators — an unusually large number — on the floor and all listening intently, Ribicoff said, "We must have the courage to face a changing world and the will to serve our best national interests."

Discussing the sales to each of the three countries, Ribicoff said the jets for Israel "will enhance both its security and its sense of security."

He praised President Anwar Sadat of Egypt as "a responsible man who surely will not abuse the modest boost in Egyptian air strength."

GOAL TO EVEN STUDENT-FACULTY RATIO

Business college plans changes

By PATRICIA LaCROIX
State News Staff Writer

MSU's College of Business will be combining several tactics in the next few months in an effort to show "good faith progress" toward meeting standards of its accrediting agency.

Dean Richard J. Lewis, in the first faculty meeting of the academic year Monday morning, unveiled a list of proposals designed to help balance the student-faculty ratio in the college.

The American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business informed Lewis last winter that the college exceeded the ratio limits allowed by the agency.

In order to avoid academic probation, the college was warned it must show "good faith progress" in balancing the ratio in periodic reports to the agency.

Included in Lewis' "laundry list" of proposals is the hiring of more faculty members in addition to some form of limiting enrollments into the college. Lewis asked faculty members at Monday's meeting to consider the feasibility of each of the options on a departmental level and to report back to him "as soon as possible."

Lewis said he expects some sort of report from each department in the college within one month.

The department's recommendations will then go to Lewis and University Provost

Clarence L. Winder for approval.

Solving the problems of the college may not be that easy, however, since each of these options could present problems.

Enrollment limitations have always left a bad taste in the mouth of University administrators, Lewis said, since state legislators' reactions to cutbacks may be unfavorable.

He explained that since MSU "is a state-supported institution," the University has a "certain responsibility" to serve all residents of the state.

Last summer, Accounting Department Chairperson Harold Sollenberger approached both Lewis and Winder with a proposal to limit enrollments. However, he said he was advised that such action would "only create bad feelings downtown (in the Legislature)."

Another alternative for limiting enrollments could be in raising the grade point average needed for admission to the college. One faculty member said the cut-off point is currently at 2.1, but it could be raised to 2.5.

While the change may not seem like much of a raise, the source said the move would cut the incoming class by about one-third.

"This wouldn't be that unfair to the residents of the state, either, since with grade inflation, such a policy would bring us in line more with other institutions," the faculty member said.

The other option open to the college — hiring additional faculty members — also is not likely now, Lewis said.

Not only must the college hold off hiring until the University is sure of this year's state allocations to MSU, but he said recruitment time has already passed.

The college initially ran into trouble with the accrediting firm when the agency redefined the role of teaching assistants. Under the new guidelines, TA's must now teach all sections of a course to be counted in the full-time faculty-student ratios.

Lewis said that in the past, a full-time tenured professor taught the lecture section of many introductory courses, with teaching assistants handling the lab sections. The policy must also be changed to comply with the AACSB standards.

Well-done burgers can cause cancer

NEW YORK (AP) — Hamburgers cooked too long at temperatures above 200 degrees Fahrenheit in an electric pan or an electric home hamburger cooking appliance can produce cancer-causing substances, a research team reported Monday.

The hamburgers cooked under these conditions give off chemical substances called mutagens, which "may represent a risk of cancer in people," according to researchers from Washington University Center for the Biology of Natural Mutagens.

The team at the St. Louis, Mo., university is headed by Dr. Barry Commoner, a noted biologist and environmentalist. Commoner said the possible risk is as yet unknown.

Commoner said, "our research also shows that regardless of how small it eventually turns out to be, the risk can be reduced to zero by choosing an appropriate cooking procedure."

The research results show that the substances do not appear if the hamburger is broiled under a heat source or in a microwave oven, Commoner said. Also, the risk can be reduced if the hamburger is fried only to the rare stage, he said.

"Apparently the crucial factors are the cooking temperature and the time of cooking," he said. "The temperatures produced by a broiler or a microwave oven are not as hot as those produced in an electric hamburger-maker, and therefore, produce fewer mutagens."

Mutagens are agents that can cause genetic changes. Scientists say that almost all substances that are mutagens also are capable of causing cancer.

The research was presented in a paper to be given at the annual meeting of the American Society of Microbiologists, which opened Monday in Las Vegas.

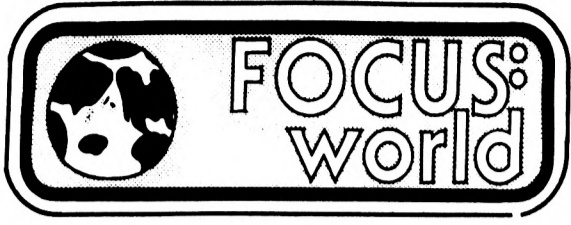

He said once scientists determined the molecular structure of the mutagens and the precise chemical reactions responsible for their formation in cooked beef and beef extract, then experiments could be made to see whether they can cause cancer in test animals.

Sadat vows to fight criticism

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat, bedeviled by sniping from the parliamentary opposition, plans a referendum within days to seek authorization to "crush anyone who casts doubt" on his policies.

Sadat, in a two-and-one-half hour speech to Parliament on Sunday, accused opposition journalists and politicians of waging a "campaign of doubt" and vowed to beat down such critics.

"But I will use democratic means," he said, announcing he would schedule a referendum to gain popular backing for a crackdown.

A presidential communique read on national television Sunday night by the information minister said the referendum would be held within a week. No details were given, but Sadat said Parliament should pass laws to implement the results.

Official sources said the government would seek the power to bar from politics both leftists and rightists who threaten Egypt's "social peace."

Dissident leader makes defense statement

MOSCOW (AP) — Yuri Orlov, founder of the Soviet Union's best known dissident group, was allowed to make a statement defending himself at the opening of his trial Monday, his wife Irina said.

"I refuse to take part in the proceedings if you don't let me speak," Mrs. Orlov quoted her husband as saying. The trial was closed to foreign reporters.

Mrs. Orlov, who was allowed to attend with her two sons, told reporters outside the courthouse her husband was accused of sending slanderous information to Western embassies and correspondents and getting paid for it.

Mrs. Orlov said her husband, founder of the Helsinki human rights group, defended himself by saying he was motivated by humanitarian and not political concerns.

Orlov founded the group to uphold the provisions of the Helsinki Agreement, a statement signed in 1975 by 33 nations that froze postwar European borders and supported human rights.

Primitive tribe discovered in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A tribe of primitive cave-dwellers wearing loin-cloths made of hammered bark has been discovered living inside the crater of an extinct volcano in the jungle wilderness of the Philippines, the government announced Monday.

A government spokesman said President Ferdinand Marcos visited the area, 430 miles southwest of Manila, during the day by helicopter.

The spokesperson said it could not be established if the tribe, which has been the subject of legends, had ever been in contact with other people.

The crater is located in Palawan province on a narrow 275-mile-long island that juts out into the South China Sea. The crater area is remote, surrounded by deep ravines and gorges and accessible only by helicopter, the spokesperson said.

Hearst prepares to complete sentence

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — An extremely depressed Patricia Hearst spent her last hours of freedom Monday preparing to return to prison to complete her seven-year sentence for federal bank robbery.

U.S. Attorney G. William Hunter said Hearst, 24, was to surrender at the minimum-security prison facility at Pleasanton, 30 miles east of San Francisco.

Hearst will have to spend at least 14 months there before being eligible for parole next year.

Hearst reportedly spent the past week at San Simeon, the fabled coastal estate built by her late grandfather, newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst, 200 miles south of her suburban Hillsborough home.

Officials to decrease nitrite in bacon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials said Monday they will sharply lower the amount of sodium nitrate that meat processors can use to cure bacon because nitrite can combine with other substances to form cancer-causing agents.

Sodium nitrite, used for centuries as a food preservative, is recognized for its ability to reduce the chance of deadly botulism bacteria in processed meat and for its capacity to make meat more appetizing.

But laboratory tests have shown that nitrites can combine with other substances, particularly when bacon is fried at high temperatures, to form nitrosamines which have caused cancer in test animals.

Assistant Secretary Carol Tucker Foreman, who oversees USDA food and consumer services, said that under an interim action beginning June 15, processors will be limited to 120 parts per million of sodium nitrite in bacon, compared with 200 parts now allowed by federal regulations.

Committee OKs Amtrak bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on Monday approved a bill that would extend the life of Amtrak passenger trains marked for extinction by the Transportation Department.

The legislation, passed by voice vote, now goes to the full House. The action is an attempt to forestall plans announced last week by Transportation Secretary Brock Adams to trim one-third of the present 27,000-mile network. Adams said a reduced system is needed to prevent Amtrak's deficits from soaring to $1 billion by 1984.

Among routes doomed by Adams' plan is one through Keyser, W. Va., hometown of Rep. Harley O. Staggers, D.-W.Va., Commerce Committee chairperson.

Staggers introduced the proposal to freeze the current Amtrak system until Oct. 1, 1979. He said this would give Congress additional time to study the costs and benefits of each route.

The transportation secretary has said the earliest any route could be eliminated is July of 1979.

HIGH COURT IGNORES PRIVACY ISSUE

Anti-homosexual laws to stand

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused on Monday to call into question the authority of states to outlaw homosexual acts between consenting adults.

The court, with two justices disagreeing, left untouched a North Carolina sodomy law despite arguments that it violates the privacy rights of homosexuals.

Civil liberties lawyers had urged the justices to use the case to study the rights of homosexuals for the first time in more than a decade.

Returning from its last two week recess of a term scheduled to end June 19, the court handed down hundreds of orders and several decisions. In other matters, the court:

• Agreed in a New York case to decide whether states may refuse to hire resident aliens as public school teachers. Past Supreme Court decision have barred states from discriminating against aliens in various occupations, but last March 22 the court said states may refuse to hire aliens as state police officers.

Also Monday, the justices left invalidated a New York law that had barred aliens from practicing medicine unless they become naturalized citizens. They also sent back to California for more study a ruling that state and local governments may not bar aliens from becoming probation officers.

• The court ruled by a 6-3 vote that state courts may intervene in labor disputes involving alleged illegal picketing on private property. Since 1959, state courts have had little authority to intervene if the National Labor Relations Board might become involved.

• Ruled 7-1 in a major decision on Indian tribal sovereignty that tribes are immune from civil suits alleging sex discrimination.

• Told a Moynan, Pa., Quaker from 1969 to 1972 who withheld portions of his federal income taxes as "war crime deductions" that he has to pay those back taxes.

• Decided by a 7-2 vote that the results of a telephone wiretap in a criminal investigation are admissible in court even though most of the calls overheard by police were not relevant to the probe.

In the sodomy case, Eugene Enslin of Jacksonville, N.C. was convicted in 1974 of having oral sex with a young U.S. Marine from nearby Camp LeJeune. Enslin, owner of a combination massage parlor-adult bookstore, was sentenced to one year in prison and served nine months before being paroled.

Enslin's lawyers argued that this case involves the question whether the government may constitutionally regulate private consensual homosexual activity between adults.

The nation's highest court has not considered involving the rights of homosexuals since 1967. It ruled that homosexuals could be deported as afflicted with a "psychic personality."

That finding was later overturned by the American Psychiatric Association, which eliminated homosexual mental disorder and defined it as a "sexual orientation disturbance."

Justices Thurgood Marshall and William J. Brennan were alone Monday in hearing Enslin's appeal.

Tribe members invading heart of Zaire province

By Associated Press

An invasion army of 4,000 exiled tribes members is driving toward the heart of Zaire's southeastern Shaba province after seizing part of a mining center and a smaller town from government troops, according to reports reaching Belgium and Zambia on Monday.

In Washington, the State Department said it was considering evacuating the estimated 100 American citizens in the area of the fighting.

Reliable Belgian sources in Brussels said the invading Katangans who crossed into Zaire from Zambia late last week had entered the copper-mining city of Kolwezi, 25 miles north of the border with Zambia. Diplomatic sources in Zambia confirmed these reports.

The Belgian sources said many of the rebel Lunda tribe members were ex-police officers driven into Angola in the early 1960s after a secessionist movement was crushed in Shaba, then known as Katanga. They said the rebels were moving north toward the city of Kamina and its Zairean army base in the middle of the province.

Shaba was known as Katanga when Zaire was the Belgian Congo. The colony gained independence from Belgium in 1960 and has been ruled since 1965 by President Mobutu Sese Seko.

His troops — aided by Moroccan soldiers, U.S. equipment and French airlifts — drove back a similar invasion by between 2,000 and 5,000 Katangans from Marxist-ruled Angola last May after two months of fighting. The 1977 incursion reached the Kolwezi area, 310 miles east of the Angolan border, but fell short of the city itself.

Belgian sources said sporadic clashes continued in the year before the new invasion, this time reportedly launched through the northwest corner of Zambia instead of directly from Angola. Zairean government officials have refused comment on the invasion. Angola says it had nothing to do with it.

Zaire claims Cuban troops took part in the fighting for Mutshatsha, but the Belgian spokesperson said this could not be confirmed. State Department spokesperson Hodding Carter in Washington said the same.

Mobutu has asked for help from Belgium, the United States, France, Morocco and China. None has announced whether it will send aid.

The Belgian sources indicated Kolwezi airport had fallen into rebel hands, but the sources in Lusaka, the Zairean capital, said heavy fighting continued Monday afternoon for control of the airfield.

Kolwezi, a city of about 100,000 people, sits astride the main road from Lubumbashi to Kamina and on the rail line from Lubumbashi west to Angola, along which the rebels attacked last year.

Terrorism prompts Italian conservatism

ROME (AP) — Initial returns from local elections Monday to a strong conservative backlash to the wave of terror in Italy that last week claimed the life of former Aldo Moro.

As the violence continued, an auto company executive was seriously wounded Monday in Bologna by Red Brigades — the tenth shooting victim in the past eight days.

The Christian Democrat Party — led by Moro — is getting a strong sympathy vote, while the Communists are losing support of voters who associated the leftist party with the radical Marxist terrorists.

Ironically the Communists, parliamentary partners of ruling Christian Democrats, had joined the government's rejection of Red Brigades demands that jailed terrorists be exchanged for Moro. The bullet-riddled body of the premier, who was kidnapped in a Rome street ambush Monday, was found in Rome last Tuesday.

The Brigades have denounced the Communists for aligning with the government.

With more than 50 percent of 4,430 polling places reporting 1,166,949 votes counted, the Christian Democrats had 42.4 percent, the Communists 27.9 percent, the Socialists 13 percent and the remainder divided among smaller parties.

SMALL POPS ONLY, PLEASE

Bang-bang no-no in E.L.

By SHEILA BEACHUM
While other parts of the state have been plagued with the sale of fireworks exceeding state and at times federal regulations, East Lansing has remained almost "fireworks-free."

more than paper caps and sparklers. The result — city merchants refuse to sell even those fireworks.

According to East Lansing police, all types of explosive devices are prohibited in the city.

City officials have taken a strong stand on the types of Class C fireworks to be sold in East Lansing, permitting the marketing of only paper caps and sparklers, despite Michigan fireworks statutes which allow such Class C fireworks as "flashlight crackers," "whistling chasers" and small rockets.

Muir's Pharmacy in Brookfield Plaza is one of the few East Lansing stores which markets sparklers.

"The only thing legal as far as fireworks go is sparklers. If somebody is caught with firecrackers or other such things, we don't charge them with anything — we only confiscate and destroy their firecrackers," an East Lansing police official said.

Dennis McGinty, East Lansing city attorney, said the city's ordinance generally restricting common fireworks sales "does not conflict with the state law."

The store had offered its customers a wider selection of small fireworks last year, one employee said, but at the request of the fire marshal had taken everything except sparklers off their shelves.

Department of Public Safety Capt. Ferman Badgley said campus police do "arrest, prosecute and fine" individuals who are caught with any type of explosive device containing gun powder.

"The city takes the position that a city ordinance can be enforced," McGinty said, adding that East Lansing merchants "can only have what they've had in the past."

East Lansing Fire Marshal Berman Prether said the city "prefers that merchants didn't sell Class C fireworks." Prether said his office has sent out a form letter to grocery stores, drug stores and other establishments which might sell Class C common fireworks.

"We arrested an individual within the past two weeks on the south side of campus for violation of the fireworks laws," Badgley said.

An employee at Goodrich's Spartan Shop-Rite Market in East Lansing said the store had acquired an assortment of various small fireworks devices to sell for the Fourth of July. But a letter from the East Lansing fire marshal combined with a visit from a fire department inspector two weeks ago prompted the store to "send everything back."

The letter states the city ordinance adopted in 1966 limits the sale of Independence Fireworks, a Detroit distributor, sells all types of Class C fireworks including roman candles and firecrackers with less than 50 milligrams of explosive material, according to a company spokesperson.

common fireworks in the city to paper caps and sparklers and requests that they comply with the ordinance.

An individual arrested for possession and use of fireworks is charged with committing a misdemeanor, Badgley said.

According to the company spokesperson, they also advertised in newspapers last year.

"Local regulations take precedence unless an injunction were served against the city," Prether said.

Student misdemeanors in these cases are usually handled by the University, he added.

The spokesperson said the company sells its merchandise throughout the state to such outlets as Circus World, K-Mart, and party and novelty shops.

A court ordered injunction against the city would likely take place only if a fireworks merchant or distributor challenged the city ordinance, saying it is contrary to state law.

Badgley said DPS usually gets more complaints than actual arrests made. However, he estimated 10 to 12 arrests are made each year on campus for violations of fireworks laws.

Manufacturers and distributors of fireworks still intend to produce and market their merchandise in Michigan this year.

Prether explained the city's strict regulations were adopted because of the extensive damage to school buildings caused by students with fireworks.

"Most complaints come in the middle of the night from people who are trying to sleep," he said.

These distributors claim the fireworks industry is a profitable business, provides people with an entertainment device and could contribute as much as $25 million to Michigan's economy this year.

Revoked license refunds offered

Available for auto plates only

Persons who have had their driver's licenses revoked for medical reasons can now obtain a refund on their license plate fees.

The refund program, which began Monday, also applies to spouses in cases where the deceased has paid the plate fees.

Refund applications are available at any Secretary of State office. The East Lansing branch is located at 327 Abbott Road.

Processing takes about 45 days, Bommarito said, and checks will be mailed after that time.

Refunds will be based on the time remaining in the license fee period following the date of the application, according to Peter Bommarito, director of information for the Secretary of State's office.

Neither Snyder's aide nor Bommarito knew how many state residents would benefit from the program, but both believed the costs to the state would not be significant.

As a result of the federal court injunction of 1976, it is legal to sell everything from sky rockets that don't explode with a loud bang to small firecrackers," he said.

Refunds will not be given for boat, snowmobile or off-the-road vehicles, Bommarito said.

The refund program results from a bill sponsored by state Sen. Joseph M. Snyder, D-St. Clair Shores, and signed into law in March. An aide to Snyder said the bill was inspired from Snyder's involvement with senior citizens, who often lose their licenses because of impaired vision.

Sawyer said his office has been receiving an increasing number of calls from merchants who have been approached by fireworks distributors encouraging merchants to procure fireworks to sell for the upcoming Fourth of July.

The study was requested by the city to find out if its plan to improve the street is a viable one.

Currently, the Michigan State Highway Department and the city are in disagreement over two separate plans to improve traffic conditions on the avenue.

EED: it needs a bigger staff

PBB — which is discussed in a related editorial on this page — has proved a significant but isolated instance of environmental pollution. Well publicized, it has roused public ire and may prove detrimental to the political fortunes of several state politicians. But PBB is not the only problem.

It has been revealed that the newly-established Environmental Enforcement Division is understaffed and hence unable to effectively deal with more pressing pollution problems.

EED chief Jack Bails asserts that his organization is a "paper tiger" and cites several instances in which toxic chemicals have been found to degrade the ecology, but the perpetrators of the pollution have gone undetected and undisciplined.

Bails has asked the DNR to supply EED with a staff of more than 30, but the division presently has the five members it started with.

DNR director Howard Tanner is taking the whole matter lightly. "We will be beefing up that division," he says, "and we're going forward as fast as possible."

All well and good, but the EED was inaugurated in January. Pollution and the effrontery of those who pollute without punishment will not take a sabbatical while Tanner and associates try to get their act together. Stewart Freeman, Michigan's assistant attorney general in charge of environmental protection, summarized the problem perfectly: "The level of violations (of anti-pollution statutes) is constant, but the number of cases being prepared for enforcement is dropping off due to a lack of people."

The EED needs a bigger staff, and the intimidating backlog of unprosecuted cases must be cleared away. Otherwise, Michigan faces more PBB-type experiences in the future.

PBB

An Oscoda resident waves a placard offering sage advice to Gov. William G. Milliken in response to the state's plan to bury 960 PBB-contaminated cattle in a huge pit in the county. The burial proposal is clearly inferior to the idea that the tainted animals should be incinerated. Burning is a sure way of ridding the environment of the toxic chemical.

The legacy of PBB has proved haunting — not only to the health of Michigan's citizens, but to the political fortunes of, among others, Gov. William G. Milliken. PBB is a toxic chemical that was accidentally dumped into cattle feed in 1973. A lackadaisical attitude among state officials — coupled with no small degree of bureaucratic blundering and outright obfuscation — forestalled immediate resolution of the problem and in fact caused it to worsen. Now the state wants to bury mistakes. It has been proposed that 960 PBB-contaminated cattle be buried in a huge pit in Oscoda County — and residents there are up in arms.

They should be. State and federal officials have declared the pit safe, and contend that the poison will seep into the water supply. That might be the case, but tell it to the residents — 150 of whom have proposed a burial site.

One picketer brandished a reading "Join the battle, bury the cattle." That is sound indeed. Safe as the Oscoda might be, studies showing burning the cattle is a fool's way of banishing PBB from the environment.

For Milliken, this latest controversy might be a harbinger of things to come. State officials have so badly mismanaged PBB affairs that clearly they have no right to expect citizens to believe what they say. Residents are contemptuous of Milliken, and if their cynicism spreads state-wide, the governor may face an uphill fight in his re-election later this year.

The state Supreme Court imposed a temporary injunction banning the burial, and residents say they are ready to take their case to federal court. Should all recourse fail, talk of more drastic measures, physically blocking trucks carrying the cattle, for example, dumping the tainted animals in the river.

Surely the latter course would be irrational and defeating, and we hope all this is avoided. If for no other reason than political self-preservation, state officials should order the cattle burned. PBB — a twisted history — should be buried.

Wood lot to parking lot

So the Forestry Club wants to muck up the Baker Woodlot with a log cabin. Wonderful. The membership will then want permission to hunt. And, of course, it will need a deer herd. And then elk. In time, oil will be discovered, and Shell or Amoco will lease the mineral rights. Royalties will go to the Forestry Club which will invest in new and expanded facilities, including a parking lot.

Thus, wood lot will have become parking lot. It will be as American as, say, the chain saw.

Riotous parties

It is always amazing how many monumental decisions get made around here without the consent of the student body. I am especially upset by the proposed construction of a cabin for student parties in Baker Woodlot. From what I have observed of student parties, they are riotous, drunken, loud, smoke-filled and sometimes destructive affairs. It is unrealistic to hope that parties in the wood lot would not be the same, to the detriment of both the wildlife and the peacefulness of a beautiful natural area. The fact that some of those animals are in danger of extinction just makes matters worse. If there is any chance of destruction at all, then the cabin should not be built, since there are ample places to party but a scarcity of wilderness areas, even on this campus which is famous for its plant and animal life. As much as I appreciate the need to "get away," it is my sincere hope that the cabin project falls through.

Transient faculty, benign neglect

I was very happy to hear Professor Frank Blatt speak out against extensive use of temporary faculty at MSU. I can't see how a true "academic community" with all the idealistic connotations of the phrase can permit the continuing systematic exploitation of our younger colleagues. The MSU Faculty Associates has, long ago, taken a strong position on this.

I note also that Professor Walter Adams has deplored the benign neglect which this University suffered during the previous administration. I see no signs as yet that anything much better can be said about the present administration nor, likely, about a future administration. I think the Faculty Associates can effectively reverse the deterioration that seems to be setting in by bringing back the University to the faculty and students.

An undemocratic, sleazy method

I would like to express my concern about the forthcoming ballot dealing with union representation at MSU. Based on various news stories and after checking with MERC, it is my understanding that there will be three choices on the ballot. These presumably will be no union, FA or AAUP. The voter can express only one preference. I have no objection to forced choice questions and answers, but where there are two distinct choices, I'd like to have the opportunity to express my wishes on both issues. When I vote "no" on the union issue, I will not have an opportunity to express my preference for a bargaining agent if that issue carries. This strikes me as a rather sleazy way of going about things. We could have the two issues separated (still on one ballot) or we could vote the anticipated ballot by the Hare System. I appreciate the fact that MERC is bound by existing statutes when it prepares the ballot. Is this allegedly democratically-oriented faculty inclined to accept this undemocratic procedure?

Ralph F. Turner
Professor of criminal justice

One percent

Professor Mark Rilling seems perturbed that the cost of faculty representation is "one percent forever." However, if, as usual, the negotiators obtain in one year an additional one percent, then the dues can be considered paid for that year on. That is why it is so popular. It is the greatest bargain around.

Actually, the dues are fixed, presently at under $200, which amounts to indeed around 1 percent for many of us. Incidentally, the MEA dues structure is democratically arrived at, and, as I understand it, the impetus for any raise in dues arises from the membership.

A challenge

Barbara Hurrell's excellent letter concerning Professor Sears Eldredge in the State News of May 8 touched many bases at once. Whole essays concerning most all of the issues she raised could, and perhaps should, be written. But I would like to focus this letter on Professor Eldredge, his talents as a teacher and director, and how his potential removal to Earlham College would be a significant loss to Michigan State University.

Dr. Eldredge and I have been colleagues in Justin Morrill College for more than half a dozen years. During that time we have taught three classes together and, with exception of those given this year, I have seen almost all of his productions. He is a brilliant teacher and a brilliant director, and I do not use that adjective casually. His ability to draw forth from undergraduate non-theater majors performances of concentrated, riveting power and sophistication is nothing short of amazing. And he has done it again and again with such diverse and challenging material as Japanese No drama, Samuel Beckett, Euripides, and Mayan myth. He is as excellent a teacher as he is as a director; his methods are similar in both situations. He is clear, concise, probing, and absolutely, humanely. During one term of a two-term course that we taught three years ago became a member of the class. I participated in directed exercises, in mime, and in elaborate and complex work with masks. It has been a long time since I had been in a classroom as a student, and an even longer time since I had felt that special something that comes from being able to experience something that is truly important. I learned a very great deal about teaching, directing, and about under Sears's tutelage.

I write this letter not in protest of Professor Eldredge's leaving, but in support of that possibility. Our University cannot afford itself the loss of such a teacher as this as a challenge.

Speating croonerism

Creating spoonerisms has always been a ponderous and burdensome occupation. A meritable vaster of it was its unintentional originator, Reverend William Archibald Spooner.

If you didn't already know, or if you missed the clubby sues in the peevish paragraph, spoonerisms are transpositions of sounds, usually initial sounds, in words.

The word spoonerism quite obviously derives from the mane of the man: Spooner. It is not as rumored the other way around: that Spooner's parents recognized his transpositioning talent shortly after he learned to talk and so renamed him Spooner after the word spoonerism.

In fact, the report that has Spooner as a wee child asking his mother at the dinner table to "peas pass the please" is factured and unveridified — as was the dinner in question.

Another ridespread rumor that has fragrantly spled is that Spooner's ability rose from nervous stuttering. This is not true. The fact is that Spooner, like all well-rinded mounds, simply possessed a natural capability.

As a preacher and Warden of the Oxford, England, New College in the early 1900s, Spooner took plenty of opportunities to exercise his skill. In the college chapel, for example, he renamed a hymn one Sunday by announcing it as "Kinquering Congs Their Tattles Tike." On another occasion he expelled a student by saying,

"You have deliberately tasted two worms and you cast Oxford by the town drain."

Spooner didn't combine his abilities to Oxford. Speaking women's school he addressed "this audience of beery we." Talking another time to an old acquaintance, he grew unsteady transposing letters, so he switched entire words instead of remembering your name perfectly, but I just can't think of a face."

His spoonerisms gave others, particularly his students, joy. And they stew dill, even today.

In the 45 years since his death, Spooner's legacy maintained, inspooning millions of spirisms. The recognizes several nonSpooners classics, including "let you to your sheet," "tons of soil" (for "sons of toil"). "The roaring pain," "and you're occupying my pie."

They are all, of course, a tribute to Spooner's genius. Truly not a talent to tick lately. All the spoonerisms since never belittle his abtleties. Instead of giurting his reputation they will only horify it.

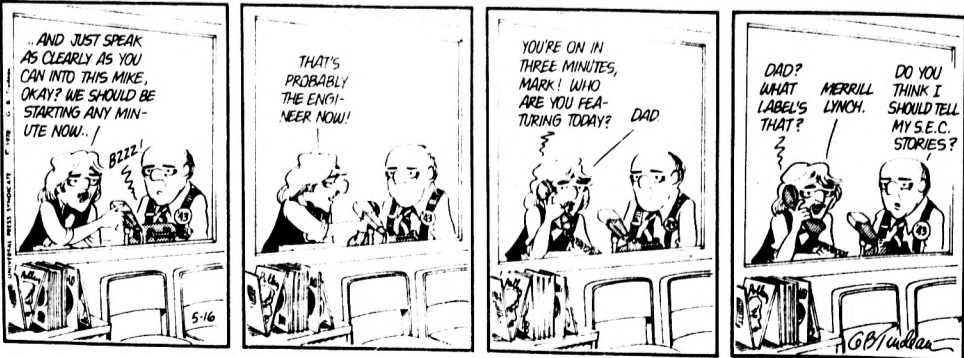

(So I'm clever; big deal.)

This is a malapropism, not a spoonerism. I note it only because it derives also from a proper name, Mrs. Malaprop, a character in Sheridan's The Rivals.

More malapropisms.

Carly Simon ventures on tour

Carly Simon is in the midst of her first full-fledged tour in five years. Touring to promote her new LP, Boys in the Trees, Simon is gradually overcoming an unusual case of stage fright that has kept her from touring for several years.

NEW YORK (AP) — The April-May tour was her first in five years, but it wasn't a comeback for Carly Simon. "Comebacks are for has-beens," she says.

And, she adds, you could hardly call it a tour, either. "It was more of a path."

She played three nights in April at the Paradise Theater in Boston. After that, she didn't have to be away from home in Manhattan overnight. There were five more dates in April, at colleges within easy driving distance, and the tour ended early this month with appearances at New York's Bottom Line.

"Somebody called it a sneakers tour," she says. "They said the members of the band put on sneakers and walked to the gigs." During the last five years, Carly Simon has only occasionally appeared on stage at concerts given by her husband, singer-songwriter James Taylor. She did one unadvertised "dress rehearsal" a year ago.

But she hadn't become a show business has-been. She kept writing songs and making records — which sold well. She had two children, Sarah, 4 and Ben, 1, and devoted herself to family life. And reports she was afraid to go on stage and perform were true, Simon says.

"It wasn't so much that way in the beginning, when I was opening a show for somebody else. But I got shy when I felt that amount of responsibility of headlining."

"Now it is just being unused to it. If I were working all the time, I would get used to the way it feels to be on stage. The audiences have been extremely warm to me; it's not as if I had a feeling I had to win over the audience," she says. "But I feel I'm new at it again. I feel as if I'm breaking in."

"Some nights it came together and some nights it didn't, depending a lot on my mood. I think I'm much too aware of how I'm feeling. I'm always sort of charting my moods and sensitivities to things. If I did that less, I wouldn't be so afraid."

During April, she had colds and had to have her sinuses drained, which made performing less fun than it might have been. "But this has been good for me to do, to see I can get back on stage," she says. So when again? She doesn't know.

Taylor appeared briefly on stage with her, coming on to sing Carole King's "Up on the Roof" and returning for an encore duet of an old Everly Brothers hit, appropriate to this couple. "Devoted to You." He cut a nerve in his hand opening a coconut during a family vacation in the British West Indies, so he couldn't do his own tour this spring; he can't play guitar.

Both he and Simon write songs, but they don't write together. They do help out on each other's recordings.

Taylor took an unusually large part in her new album, Boys in the Trees, Simon explains. "He was doing a lot of arrangements for me, so he is responsible for a lot of the feelings of the songs, a lot of everything. He wasn't working on an album of his own at the time, so he was extremely helpful."

Simon wrote eight of the 11 songs on the new album.

Chance Wayne. The big tests for these performers were the long speeches both had to deliver facing the audience, and each one was moving and convincing.

The Repertory Company's program benefitted enormously by having the space and the staging resources of Fairchild Theatre. Unfortunately, dance groups in the Lansing area often have to put with kleenex-sized stages that offer spectators the worst possible angles for viewing dance, and with lighting and sound systems that would be only barely adequate for a third-grade class play.

WGA's in business to aid 'little golfer'

By MILTON RICHMAN
UPI Sports Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — You wouldn't believe how tough it is to give $3 million away. Just give it away. No strings attached.

Bert Stewart, a former RAF fighter pilot found it out by trying to give away all that money for what he calls "the most incredible tournament ever held for non-professional golfers."

Stewart, 65, is president of the newly created World Golf Association, and being an ordinary golfer himself, a guy who generally shoots in the 80s, he often wondered how it would feel to be teeing the ball up or standing over a putt for $50,000 or more, like Jack Nicklaus, Gary Player and Hubie Green do.

That was how he came up with his concept for the WGA, which already has set the machinery in motion for awarding $150,000 to the winner of its annual classic, more than the top prize in any professional tournament now, as well as other cash prizes totaling more than $3 million.

"Our chief aim is to give the 'little golfer' some kind of recognition," says Stewart. "He has never really had any, nor has he ever had the chance to earn the kind of money we're awarding."

After coming up with his ideas, Stewart's biggest problem was credibility.

"Finding exactly the right man to serve as commissioner of our organization was not only important but absolutely vital," he says. "Having made my choice now, I don't think I could've found a more creditable man in the country."

The man Stewart chose as commissioner was Wes Parker, the popular, respected one-time first baseman for the Los Angeles Dodgers. Parker didn't come that easily. Stewart had to sell him his concept first before he could sell him on the idea of serving as commissioner.

"Bert came to me five years ago and asked me whether I'd be interested," Parker said. "I realized immediately this was a very ambitious project. After I got to know Bert, I said yes. Why? Because he's a gentleman and he's honest. Whether this thing will go or not, I'm not sure, but I am sure it has been very carefully thought out, the tournament will be run fairly and the WGA is totally dedicated to honesty."

Any non-professional golfer over 21 can join the WGA. Charter memberships are available for $25 annually to those who apply by July 31, after which the entry fee goes up to $35. Stewart already is taking applications for membership and all those interested can write the WGA, Dept. 1891, Pasadena, Calif., 91050.

"You don't need an established handicap to join our organization, but you will need one to compete in our classic in November of next year," Stewart said. "We will hold qualifying rounds before the championship itself, which will be played at the El Prado Golf Course in Chino, California."

"The bulk of it (the money) will come from the entry fees in the qualifying rounds," Stewart said. "We're hoping to have 200,000 members. All the money that comes in for membership fees will be held in escrow in a Los Angeles bank. We anticipate additional revenue from ancillary situations that could result from the licensing of our name."

The United States Golf Association isn't too happy about the WGA because it feels the new organization is, in effect, offering prize money to amateurs.

Stewart sees it differently.

"For those worried about their amateur standing, we have a provision whereby any golfer can donate his prize money to whatever charity he chooses," he points out. "We aren't looking to professionalize amateurs in that sense. We want to help golf, not hurt it. That's why I keep emphasizing our tournament is for non-professional golfers."

Thomas lauded as top fencer

Senior Chris Thomas, who won the Big Ten Sabre championship the past two seasons, was given the Dr. James Feurig Award as MSU's Most Valuable Fencer at the team's banquet held recently at Kellogg Center.

Also, Thomas was given the Charlie Schmitter award for the fencer who wins the most bouts throughout the season. His final record was 32-6 on the season, 9-0 in the Big Ten meet.

Jon Thomas, Chris' freshman brother, received the Richard Brooks Award for the most improved fencer, while Bryan Peterman, who finished third in the epee in the Big Ten, was selected as next year's team captain.

Athletic director Joe Kearney, who spoke at the banquet, said that he is recommending to the athletic council that the women's fencing team gain varsity status to become MSU's 11th women's varsity team.

Spartans back in conference race

By MICHAEL KLOCKE
State News Sports Writer

The MSU baseball team got the break it needed this weekend, and the Spartans took advantage of it.

Front-running Michigan split its doubleheader with Iowa Sunday while the Spartans were rained out of their second straight twinbill. But MSU swept Northwestern Monday in a makeup doubleheader, winning the opener 3-0 and leading the nightcap 17-4 in the seventh inning.

The Spartans are now just two games behind Michigan, and the teams play a home-and-home series this weekend. So Danny Litwhiler's team, now 30-17 overall and 10-4 in the Big Ten, could conceivably catch the Wolverines, 12-2 in the conference.

MSU's doubleheader with Iowa and Michigan's twinbill with Northwestern will only be made up if they could possibly have an effect on the final standings.

Even if MSU finishes second to Michigan, there is a good chance the Spartans will still play in the NCAA tournament with an at-large bid. Wisconsin, 10-6, and Iowa, 9-6, are the only teams with a chance of overtaking MSU for second place.

Once again it was Kirk Gibson who led MSU's attack Monday. The flanker-turned-centerfielder cracked three home runs in the nightcap as the Spartans romped past the Wildcat's. Gibson, the leading home run hitter in the Big Ten, now has 13 roundtrippers for the year. The Spartan record is 14, set by Shaun Howitt.

Early in the season Litwhiler said the conference race could very well go to the final weekend, and it was a prophetic statement.

Unfortunately for MSU fans, Saturday's 1 p.m. contest at Kobs Field will conflict with the playing of the Alumni football game at Spartan Stadium. Sunday's game will be at Ann Arbor.

Since the teams won't be playing doubleheaders, the games will be nine innings instead of the customary seven.

The Spartans will now host three non-conference doubleheaders this week, beginning with Eastern Michigan at 1 p.m. today. MSU will also host Oakland Wednesday and Central Michigan Thursday. The CMU game is a makeup of Monday's scheduled twinbill.

Although the doubleheaders are not conference games, they will still be important in determining whether the Spartans get an NCAA bid as overall record is taken into consideration.

With the Michigan games coming up this weekend, Litwhiler's pitching staff is going to be somewhat depleted. You can expect the Spartan mentor to use many of his relief pitchers as starters since MSU has 10 games in six days.

If the Spartans do get into the NCAA tournament with an at-large bid, they will most likely compete in a regional other than the Midwest.

Women netters go to regionals

Although the women's tennis team did not win the state title and had a disappointing performance in the singles and doubles tournaments, they still didn't come out empty handed.

The netters received an at-large bid for regional play and Debbie Mascarin and Cindy Bogdonos also received at-large bids for the singles tournament.

"I was kind of sure that the team and Debbie would be going, but I wasn't so sure about Cindy," coach Earl Rutz said.

"In a case like Cindy's, it was tough to tell whether she was going to go or not because it is difficult to know what other schools had submitted. But she has been playing better and deserved to go."

Rutz is still disappointed that Mike Kruger, Heather Mac Taggart and Jennifer Briemaier were not recommended by the state even though they still may not have received the bid.

Club Sports

The following members of the MSU Karate Club placed at the 14th annual MSU Open held Saturday:

Jeff Beckers, third, green belt forms; Dave Rusing, third, white belt forms; Jill Simons, first, women's white belt fighting; Sheryl Newick, second, women's white belt fighting; Claudia Gostene, third, women's white belt fighting; Debbie Ravens, first, women's brown belt fighting; Dianne Kuczajda, fourth, women's brown belt fighting; Roberta Shafer, third, women's black belt fighting; Jeanne Kropp, fourth, women's black belt fighting.

Other winning members were Len Allison, fourth, white belt lightweight fighting; Bill Clever, third, white belt heavyweight fighting; John Tew, third, green belt lightweight fighting; John Perrault, first, brown belt lightweight fighting; Steve Lambly, third, brown belt lightweight fighting; Larry Royster, fourth, brown belt lightweight fighting; and Lance Hazzard, second, black belt heavyweight fighting.

Denver Nuggets' forward Bobby Jones (24) puts in two of his 13 points of Seattle's Jack Sikma in Denver's 123-114 win Sunday. Seattle holds a 3-2 margin in the NBA semi-finals series, with game six scheduled for Wednesday at Seattle. The Baltimore Bullets upset Philadelphia 4-2 in the other semi-final series. Should Seattle win Wednesday, there will be two teams in the NBA final which many people thought would be eliminated from the playoffs in the first round.

COMMUNITY AS REHABILITATOR

Should convicts stay in society?

By KY OWEN
State News Staff Writer

For a corrections system to be effective, convicts must be kept in the only place rehabilitation will work — the community, according to the director of the MSU School of Justice.

The role of corrections must be changed from merely housing society's rejects to one of sharing responsibility for their reintegration into society, George T. Felkenes explained in his new book, "Constitutional Law for Criminal Justice."

Prisons, Felkenes said, remove people from society for a number of years, keeping convicts "out of our hair."

Most prisons are built away from cities, causing convicts to further lose touch with society, Felkenes explained. He cites as an example the recently-built medium-security prison at Kinchloe, Mich., which is not close to any major communities. The nearest city to Kinchloe is Sault Ste. Marie, 22 miles away.

Felkenes advocates community-based corrections, which keeps convicts in touch with regular society.

Community-based corrections involve release centers where convicts are confined at night, but are allowed to have an outside job to support families or go to school.

Another problem with the current corrections system is the overcrowding of prisons, caused by attempts to "get them (the criminals) out of the way by shipping them to a prison," Felkenes continued.

"There needs to be a better selection of people sentenced to prisons," he said.

The public needs to learn that custody is not always the best solution, Felkenes contended. For instance, it does no good to put convicts of victimless crimes — such as marijuana possession — in prison. He added that many one-time offenders sent to prison come out more hardened than when they went in.

The degeneration occurs because in prisons convicts "live like animals," Felkenes said.

Prisoners sleep in bunks two and three high and eat fatty and greasy foods. A lack of worthwhile work often causes convicts to learn more about crime from other prisoners, he maintained.

To prevent counterproductivity, Felkenes recommended that prisons provide programs to teach convicts trades and increase their educational levels to prepare them for re-entry to society.

Many prisons allow convicts to take college courses, and then brag about one convict who received a degree, Felkenes said, adding that many convicts only have a fourth- or fifth-grade education.

Programs should be designed to help convicts to survive in the world without returning to crimes, he said.

Prisons should also provide psychological counseling and medical help for the prisoners, he said.

"A lot of them (the prisoners) have emotional problems."

Felkenes said. For changes to be made in the corrections system, more money and public interest is needed.
