Under Israeli law, for Esmail to have been convicted of the second charge he would have had to have contact with an enemy agent of a country, not a cause or

Under his 15-month sentence Esmail would be in prison until March 21. The six months he served prior to conviction is considered part of his current sentence.

There is an Israeli law, similar to parole in the United States, that could free Esmail after he has served two-thirds of his sentence, or 10 months.

Early in October, Esmail's case will be reviewed by a three-person Israeli panel to determine if he should be released early. The panel will consider Esmail's behavior in prison, along with recommendations from the U.S. embassy in Tel Aviv, MSU and

The letter came in response to a council-drafted letter recently sent to U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell asking about Political surveillance by the FBI in East Lansing, Bell answered the letter, saying he asked the director of the FBI to look into

"Civiletti is saying that if the investigation is being conducted according to guidelines, it's OK," he added.

Because Esmail is a U.S. citizen and is not being charged with any illegal actions in this country Griffiths said he will not tolerate any kind of domestic security

Griffiths said he plans to write another letter to Bell asking for an explanation of the "disconnected nonsense."

By OWEN ULLMANN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contract talks aimed at heading off a possible strike by postal workers remained snagged Wednesday on the question of layoffs, with bargainers reportedly refusing to bend on the issue.

Political atmosphere in Israel heated as nation approaches peace decisions

By LARRY THORSON

JERUSALEM (AP) — A shouting match in Parliament between Prime Minister Menachem Begin and opposition leader Shimon Peres heated up the tense political atmosphere in Israel on Wednesday as the Jewish state approached tough decisions on Mideast peace issues

Peres, in his first speech to the Knesset, or parliament, since his talks with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat 10 days ago in Austria, demanded a debate on the Mideast situation. The Austria, demanded a debate on the indeast studeon. The Labor Party chief accused Begin of "filling a prescription for Israeli's location" and of failing to keep the Knesset informed on Begin's gruffly shouted response was heavy with sarcasm, asking Peres if he and Sadat had discussed the Labor Party's doctrine of territorial compromise. "You believe it is the high road, the only way to peace, and there is no other," said Begin.

Holding a sheet of paper, the prime minister asked: "Wnat is the meaning of territorial compromise? Part for me and part for you." He then ripped the paper in half. The harsh words in the Knesset also reflected divisions in Begin's Likud cabinet, which is scheduled to respond on Sunday to Sadat's latest peace proposals.

Government controls—but there's a catch

WASHINGTON (AP) - A House committee approved a bill Wednesday giving the government control of White House papers but permitting a president to seal some records for up to 10 years.

The Government Operations Committee rejected a move to give Congress veto power over a president's ability while in office to dispose of records he felt had no historical or informational value. Opponents said the proposal raised many constitutional questions.

The overall measure was approved on

The bill would require that outgoing presidents, beginning in 1981, turn over all official White House records to the National Archives.

However, a president would be empowered to restrict access — for up to 10 years — to classified documents or material regarding national defense, foreign policy or appointments

The chief executive also could restrict access to documents dealing with trade secrets, advice from aides and personnel and medical files.

The CIA works for us, but they define the 'us'

When John Stockwell, former head of the CIA's Angolan task force, resigned from the agency last year to write a book on the CIA's involvement in Angola, the agency was justifiably nervous. When the book, In Search of Enemies, finally came to print, the agency hastily denied almost every charge Stockwell leveled at the agency.

Last week, the Senate Intelligence Committee revealed that the agency lied when it denied the charges made by Stockwell. But that exposure was trivial compared to the degree of lying the agency used when it "informed" the United States Congress of the CIA's Angolan activities. And it wasn't just the career spies in the middle of the organization who lied, it was Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and then CIA Director William Colby.

And for what reason? Obviously they determined it to be in the best they fight on the Marxist side? One really be to the point that one, two, what is best for the nation? We we might never be able to find out.

A little bit of history is in order to put things into perspective. A civil war occurred in Angola. The sides split up into pro-Western factions versus Marxist-oriented "popular" movements. The Marxists had Cuban help, the pro-Western had the CIA. The CIA actively, but covertly, recruited mercenaries — mainly ex-U.S. soldiers — and transported them to Angola to fight the Marxist. The Marxists won and captured many pro-Western forces, among them two Americans. Both Americans were asked: if they were paid double their CIA salaries, would interest of the nation. But can it American said "yes" and was given a 15 year prison sentence. The even a dozen men are deciding other, a truly committed American who was fighting against truly hope that is not the case, but we don't know. And what's even He was executed. He was not a more frightening is to think that mercenary, he was an American patriot — or so he was being assured by the CIA. But that was before the capture. After the capture, the U.S. State Department flatly denied any connection with the Americans and insisted that there was no way the United States could help the two because they were mercenaries engaging in illegal activities on their own

> But it was not their volition; it was the CIA's. But never once would they admit it. Even now they try to qualify their lies by saying that they never "intentionally" misle anyone. How can they be such semantic simpletons? One can not mislead without intentions. What kind of word games can they pull over on the American public before people quite believing? William Colby, in a recent Playboy interview, summed up the attitude of the CIA when he volunteered that he never lied about anything, it was just that people asking the questions usually asked the wrong ones or pursued the wrong angles.

> Contrary to Mr. Colby's insightful assertions, the U.S. Congress does not have an adversary relation with the CIA. They are the bosses of the CIA and must start acting accordingly — before it's

FBI hires the best

Attorney General Griffin Bell laid it all on the line a couple weeks ago when he stood up to a federal judge and refused to hand over names of FBI agents who had infiltrated the Socialist Workers Party. Now this week we learn just what kind of agents the FBI is so anxious to protect. No wonder Bell doesn't want names released.

Gary Thomas Rowe was one of the FBI's chief informers on the Ku Klux Klan during the mid '60s. Rowe participated in all the big events, culminating his career by watching four young black children blown to bits from a bomb planted in the church they were attending. Rowe thoughtfully tipped off the FBI about the bomb, but even more thoughtfully, waited until it was too late to stop it. In addition, Rowe is now proudly saying that he himself shot and killed a black man.

But why would a man implicate himself in murder? Some contend that it is to publicize his life story, being made into a movie. Others say it is a guilty conscience. Some say flatly that his admission is a lie. We say it is totally beside the point. Why was a man like that working for the FBI in the first place?

And what kind of people do they have infiltrated now? What kind are in the Nazi party? What kind are in the Jewish Defense League? What kind are in the Iranian Student Organizations? Does the list go on, or are we just being paranoid?

Possibly both, but paranoia toward domestic and international surveillance agencies, in our minds, is a healthy attitude. The FBI seems to have the knack for finding people who are very skilled at infiltration - hardly any of them ever seem to be discovered by the organizations they spy on. But that probably stems from the fact that they do not train infiltrators per se. Their tactics seem to be: what can we find dirty about this individual that can be used against him? In other words, how can we force this person who is usually already in an organization — to cooperate with us and turn traitor to his allies? It works, but it is disgusting — even when it involves the more disgusting members of the Ku Klux Klan.

The point is, there is no reason for Attorney General Bell to pretend we are dealing with American heroes when he insists their anonyminity be protected.

Tripling isn't all that bad

I'm over at O'Hare with an hour to kill between planes and the bar hasn't opened yet. I'm leaning against the newsstand, leafing through the latest Hustler, I hear somebody say "Good morning, Lash, I wonder if you have just a minute? I'd like to ask you a few Twe just come to an exciting point in the story I'm reading, and I sure don't want to be interrupted. I'm about to snarl "Get lost, buster!", when I look around and I see it's Big Ed Harden. Right behind him I see Bob Perrin and Tiger Jack Breslin. Of course, Mr. President," I smiles, shoving the mag back in the rack, "What can I do or you:

"I know you get around a great deal," he says, "what with your consulting and arbitrating, and giving all those papers at professional meetings. I thought that with your experience as a world traveler, you might be able to help us with a problem we've run

"I'll be glad to help in any way I c.n." I says.
"It's like this," he says. "We're on our way to Des Moines for this meeting of land-grant college administrators. The hotel they booked us into just notified us it's overcrowded and they're going to have to put the three of us in the same room.'

"So what's the problem?" I asks. "They roll in a cot, Bob and Tiger Jack toss a coin to see who gets it, OK? It's only going to be temporary, anyway. On the second night, the hotel won't be full, you move Perrin out, you and 3resin'il have the room to yourselves. "There's the bright side to it, too, you may not have thought of," I adds. "While the three of you are sharing the room, the hotel'ill give you a lower rate. The money you save, you can turn back to the 't". If you don't blow it on booze and broads."

"Wouldn't that be violating the law?" Perrin pipes up. "Twe heard the rooms in the hotel are pint-sized, and Attorney General Kelley has ruled it's unlawful to put three people in a room with less than 500 cubic feet of air space."

"Kelley's ruling doesn't apply in Iowa," I explains.
"Lash," the prexy says, taking me by the arm, leading me away from Perrin and Breslin, "I'd like to talk to you for a minute alone. It isn't just the shortage of air space that bothers me. It's the nervous strain I'll be under if they put the three of us in that

"I'll have to agree with you, Mr. President," I admits, "those two turkeys wouldn't be my first choice, either, to be cooped up with in one room for three days. But it really won't be all that bad. You'll be out of the room most of the day, going to workshops and buzz sessions. You'll only be in the room to sleep."

"But that's just the problem," he says. "I won't be able to get any sleep. I was stuck with those two birds once before at a big conference in Urbana. I'm not sure I can take it

"Just as I was dozing off, at about 2 a.m.. Breslin started jogging around the room. huffing and puffing like a sperm whale. Kept it up a whole hour, Lash! Then, when I think he's finally quieted down, he does 50 pushups, counting 'em out like he's a Marine recruit in boot camp. I thought I'd never get to sleep."

"Well," I tells him, "when Tiger Jack sacks out, you'll be OK. Perrin's a real silent

"That's what I thought, too," he says. "But he's not when he's asleep. He snores something awful. Talks in his sleep, too. That other time, he had a two-hour argument with himself about whether he did the right thing when he fired Mary Pollock. Do you suppose there's any way you can get us out of that room. Lash?"

"If it was any other outfit, I might be able to," I says. "But that land grant college association of yours is might hard-nosed. You go to their meetings, they force you to stay in the hotel where their convention meets."

"That's what I found out," Big Ed says glumly. "I told them tripling was wrong, you now what they said, Lash? They said if we didn't like it, we didn't have to come to their "I'm afraid you'll just have to live with it," I tells him. "But don't sweat it, Mr.

President. You'll survive. Tripling isn't all that bad.

Ya gotta relax to shake

By BARBARA J. EVANS

I agree that self-sufficiency and being emotionally self-reliant are worthy goals for some people. And those attributes certainly help and may even be prerequisites for enjoying certain "special comforts and joys of solitude." But the way that I be found he sounds commorts and joys of solution. The way that technique going about it doesn't sound very joyful to me. In fact, he sounds downright miserable about the whole thing. ("Shaking loneliness." State News, July 19)

He seems to believe that when he isn't alone he is wasting time, that there are good and bad pursuits and that time and activities themselves have qualties. I propose that time is neither good or ad except as we look at it. And time that is spent badly is so nan except as we look at it. And time that is spent badly is so defined by the spender.

Time is only spent badly if you believe that:

you should be doing something else, or if your expectations of what should be happening in a situation and different than what we return.

The feeling of waste comes from a feeling of lack of control—of yourself in the first instance and of the situation in the second. And when you feel powerless you can feel frustrated — and angry — and hostile — and depressed — and generally downright Conversation doesn't have to be superficial if you aren't afraid to reveal a little of yourself and share some real thoughts with other people. And you can even get some good stuff to take home to that self" you are nurturing. Many times I have found real in a comment made in an offhand way by someone in a group or even learned something from something I said myself. I don't believe that the rests we all take from "putting our time to good use" are only a "temporary anesthetic." Maybe the mind gets tired just like the body and needs to relax, loosen up and let the world roll by a little.

Singer/songwriter James Taylor believes that's all there is and so in his lyrics, "the secret of life is enjoying the passing of 'Well, I'm not sure of that, but I don't believe that you can time. Wen, I m not sure of that, but I don't believe that you can find truth or understand the nature of things by gritting your teeth and bearing down. And I believe something can be gained by genuinely relaxing. Perhaps only then, when you begin to find joy in "work, party time, and drinking chatter," can you really begin to enjoy life.

A teacher of mine put it very simply one Monday morning before an 8 a.m. class, "I can't seem to get started this morning. I think when I don't play so good, I don't work so good."

It is mid-summer and to most teenagers the vacation means a lot of leisure time, free the vacation means a lot of leisure time, free from the routine of the school year. But for some 200 young men and women gathered on campus last week, the teaching and learning process is still part of their everyday life.

They all seemed adultlike and serious, but careful observation revealed that they were still young girls and boys who did not plan to miss out on any of the fun that makes teenage life so important.

Peter Gabriel returns for seconds

State News Reviewer Peter Gabriel has always been an elusive figure. His onstage persona during the ears he fronted the band nesis consisted more of his masks and props that his per sonality. At the same time, his songs were carefully crafted theatrical vignettes stories that never revealed the face of their author. Like David Bowie, Gabriel approached rock from the perspective of an actor, changing personalities with every number.

Gabriel made a conscious effort to change his image after he left Genesis for a solo career. On his first solo tour he appeared onstage in a sweat suit and tennis shoes, and his excellent "Solsbury Hill" single was semi-autobiographical, in that it was based on his departure from the band. But for the most part, his songs embodied the same cool detach ment that characterized his alnum, Peter Gabriel (Atlantic SI) 19181), it's clear that some more of the masks have come down. Gabriel is still an actor. but the parts he plays on this LP seem to be a lot closer to the real Peter Gabriel. As he says in "Indigo:" "I've always tried.

The result is that this album is far moodier than anything Gabriel has done before. The upbeat snappiness of the first solo album shows up in isolated instances (as on "A Wonderful Day in a One Way World"), but even then it is tempered with a wry resignation. In fact, the combination of melancholy and mild cynicism that pervades albums and the recent David Gilmour solo effort.

Robert Fripp, best known for his role in King Crimson, has done an admirable job of producing a sound that helps evoke these feelings. His production is dense and murky, necessitating repeated listenings before indi vidual songs stand out. His influence is also noticeable in that the album is loaded with to those found on albums by Brian Eno, with whom Fripp has extensively collaborated.

Musically, this album is markedly different from the previous album. On that LP, Gabriel was trying hard to escape the shadow of his former band and assert his credentials as a songwriter. To do this he as a songwriter. To do this he tried his hand at a broad array of styles, ranging from hard rock to ballads, barber-shop ditties, and bloozy barroom wailing. While most of the tunes worked well, they still came off as being too self-conscious, and often one-dimen-

The songs on the new album are much more idiosynchratic than previous numbers. Gabriel's lyrics twist tortuously through the music in a way that is uniquely his own, and while this music sounds more like Genesis than the last album, this comparison fades after repeated listenings.

Perhaps the most interesting song on Peter Gabriel is "Ex-posure." which has Gabriel moaning that one word over a slow, oozing Fripp/Eno/Tan-gerine Dream background (the album jacket credits the pro-ducer with "Frippertronics" on this cut). Hopefully Gabriel will

By the way, if you bought the first solo album, you've no doubt noticed that both of these albums are entitled simply Peter Gabriel. According to a recent interview. Gabriel has said that he intends to nam next few albums that, too, in an effort to maintain a sort of continuity. He compared it to publishing a magazine, in that the name remains the same while the contents change from issue to issue.

That same interview also ought out the fact that Gabriel has once again adopted a curious new way of wearing his hair — he has recently had his head shaved. Long-time follow-ers of Genesis will remember that for a long while Gabriel had a single stripe shaved back from the top of his forehead, in a sort of reverse-mohawk.

Perhaps the best indication of what Gabriel is trying to accomplish with his new album can be found on the cover. On its front we see a solemn-faced Gabriel literally clawing at his own image. With successive own image. With successive albums we may eventually see more of this man's fascinating personal vision — minus the masks. For Gabriel, this album is a healthy step in the right

Ron and Betty Carter due for Eclipse Jazz concert

Two Carters — Ron and Betty — will be performing Friday at the University of Michigan during Ann Arbor's art fair as part of the University's Eclipse summer jazz series.

Ron Carter is acknowledged by many to be the premier jazz bassist of his day, a superb player who has played with such jazz giants as Miles Davis. Eric Dolphy, Herbie Hancock, Freddie Hubbard and McCoy Tyner, among many others. Carter's current quartet, which appeared at MSU last year, consists of bassist Buster Williams, drummer Ben Riley and pianist Kenny Barron.

Carter himself plays piccolo bass with the group.
Vocalist Betty Carter is renowned as a bebop vocalist who emerged with Lionel Hampton's band in the later '40s and has since recorded sporadic but always excellent albums. Her current band is a trio consisting of pianist John Hicks, drummer Clifford Barbero, and an as-yet-to-be-announced drummer.

Carter is currently enjoying a revival in popularity due heavily to exposure in the mass media — such as Newsweek and Time — and a resurgence of interest by fans of jazz vocalists in general.

Tickets for the 8 p.m. show are available in East Lansing at Discount Records and will be sold at the door. Prices are $5.50, $4.50 and $3.50. There will be only one performance.

One Last Bar . .

State News Staff Writer

I wanna tell you I've been reading this column — Barroom Boogwabazh, Midnight Ramblings, That Uncertain Urge or whatever you wanna call it — and I've been feeling left out. Left out because first of all, I can pour down beer with the best of 'em, and second of all, because my favorite place to drink, my SIR PIZZA - the name alone brings tears to my eyes and dryness to my throat.

Y'know. I'm not one to bow down to dreaded peer pressure but I've always found it a little hard to explain to people: no thank you, I don't feel like going to Beggars but how about Sir Pizza? SIR PIZZA? they'd scoff, then walk their merry way to a world I never made.

But I'd be content sitting in that warm little pizza joint, never eating a thing — a little garlic bread here and there, sure, but who wants to buy food when you're a strugglin' student who who wants to duy look when you're a struggin student who has to scrimp in order to buy your beer?

Sir's — as those in the know call it — has a whole lotta sentimental and semi-mental value to me, which makes sense since, as are most of its patrons, I was a Brody resident when I first made its acquaintance. I drank my first pitcher of beer there and I'll probably drink my last one there, too, which is AOK by me A-OK by me.

Back in '71 through '75 I was an undergrad here. I worked in Back in 71 through 761 was an undergrad nere. I worked in campus radio — WBRS, Brody's own station, as a matter of fact — and I used to have the 10 p.m. to midnight shift. Which made walking over to Sir's the easiest, most desirable thing in the world to do, rain, sleet or snow. Best of all, the beer was always cheap — it still is, sort of, though time and inflation have taken their toll — and remarkably easy to drink, if you catch my drift. So much so, in fact, that it always seemed a considerably longer walk TO Sir's than it was hack home. Pleasures of innocent walk TO Sir's than it was back home. Pleasures of innocent

I can remember having my first pitcher of dark beer and my first pitcher of mixed beer — dark and light — and I always thought the dark beer was more potent, until someone told me the breweries added molasses to the beer to make it darker. which kinda hurt my feelings. Didn't really care in the long run, I guess, because I still drink it whenever I can. Sir's has changed a lot from those days when I used to share Sir's has changed a lot from those days which a six pitchers with a good friend or two. For one, they've hung up six pitchers with a good Iriend or two. For one, they ve hung up tiffany lamps everywhere and changed the place's name — at least on the inside — to Clara's. (Am I the only one who thinks Clara is a cow's name?) And if that's not enough, they've gotten rid of the little guy on the napkins who I always assumed to be Sir Pizza himself. All the napkins say now are "Clara's crumb-catcher," which strikes me as aesthetically overbearing, to say the least.

One of the highlights of this "Clara's" changeover, however, is the brand new placemat menus, which are illustrated and reminiscent of Big Boy and Dolly at their best. My favorite illustration is the one placed next to Sir's shaved ham sandwich, where a happy little pig sits next to a barber pole with shaving cream on his rear and a shaving razor in his other hand. Humor such as this understandably works most successfully after

My favorite time to visit Sir's is usually at the beginning of fall term, when Brody residents look for cheap thrills and more often than not find them at the bottom of beer glasses or hunched over toilets. Fin not quite sure how the new Quality Dairy next to Sir's has affected business; it's probably a lot more fun to get beer to go and listen to music in your own dorm room, but Sir's DOES have a jukebox and all the aural and visual stimulation one requires for serious or contemplative

So: I'm a humble guy, and the only atmosphere I need when drinking requires oxygen and little else. Sir's, despite tiffany lamps and the intrusion of "Clara," remains unpretentious and healthily varied in its clientel. Football players one night, actual footballs the next. Life should be like that, too, ya know?

Beatty produces a winner; 'Heaven can Wait' superb

By BILL HOLDSHIP

When it comes to success, nothing seems to work as well as what has already worked in the past. Within virtually every entertaingenre, the rules remain the same take an old formula and build on it.

It appears that Warren Beatty followed this rule while making Heaven Can Wait. Aside from the technological advancements the motion picture industry has achieved, the film resembles nothing so much as one of those comedic, fantasy filled, romantic romp classics from the 1930s. In fact, the film's screenplay was adapted from the 1941 flick. Here Comes Mr. Jordan. Nonetheless. Heaven Can Wait is the most delightful and ntertaining movie 1978 has offered thus far

Following his huge but scattered successes with Bonnie and Clyde and Shampoo, Heaven Can Wait also reinforces the notion that Warren Beatty is one of our greatest modern film auteurs. Beatty's credits in the film include not only the lead role, but producer, co-director (with Buck Henry), and co-author with Elaine May as well. It's safe to bet that an Oscar nomination no doubt awaits in all four categories.

The plot of Heaven Can Wait seems a bir odd coming from a man who expressed interest in such unorthodox project as a high budget porno film and a Howard Hughes biography prior to the production of this film. The story centers on Joe Pendleton (Beatty), a Los Angeles Rams quarterback, who is involved in a traffic accident, and is prematurely escorted to heaven by an inexperienced celestial messenger (Henry).

When they reach heaven and discover the mistake, Mr. Jordan (James Mason), the not-so-grim reaper of fate, orders that Pendleton be returned to earth. The only problem is that the quarterback's body has already been cremated, so the search is on for

The three finally temporarily decide on Leo

Farnsworth, an eccentric and tyrannical millionaire. All hell breaks loose when the amiable Pendleton assumes the role, and the film is a hilarious comedy of errors from this point on. The laugh a minute subplots include, among other things, a murder scheme between the hysterical Mrs. Farnsworth (Dyan Cannon) and Farnsworth's bumbling personal secretary (Charles Gro-din): Farnsworth's purchase of the Rams, and his efforts to convince his former trainer and friend (Jack Warden) that he is really Pendleton; a romantic liason with Julie Christie; and even a climactic Super Bowl game for good measure.

unreal as the plot may sound, Heaven Can Wait is enchanting enough to make the audience suspend disbelief from the offset. The enchantment is ageless, and one can only wonder why the film received a GP rating. Beatty's direction derives the very best from his supporting cast, but it is Beatty himself who steals the show. Beatty's characteriza-tion is so endearing that one can't help but root for Pendleton/Farnsworth. The Beatty May collaboration on the screenplay is superb, her best since New Leaf. The writers have succeeded in topically updating the story without forsaking the non-saccharine sentimentality of the original.

Heaven Can Wait offers the viewer no socio-psychological-philosophical messages or themes. All it offers is good, clean fun, and the possibility of making one feel good. If there is anything it's trying to express, it would probably be the age-old cliche of "love conquers all."

Nonetheless, in this summer film season that has so far offered Lansing man-eating sharks and bees, a 12-year-old sex symbol, a son of Satan, a cheap Bogie parody, a Vietnam morality tale, and more John Travolta fever, Heaven Can Wait is a refreshing breath of air even if that breath is 37 years old. Besides. what's wrong with feeling good?

Ella takes Cole Porter to new jazzy heights

By RENALDO MIGALDI State News Reviewer

Ella Fitzgerald: Dream Dan cing (Pablo 2310 814)

So I'm sitting on the grass by the Administration Building near the river rapids, trying vainly to plough through Ezra Pound's Cantos. I read the same line over again and again but the damn thing makes no sense to me. Disgusted, I throw the book down and lie back on the grass, and close my eyes. Inside my head, music hap-

ens. A soft samba beat. Gentle piano trill like moody '40s cocktail torch jazz, Hesitant saxophones.

A string section is unrolling softly just a moment behind my eyes. What is this, anyway? —

No bomping boomers, no savage cries, no intricate cerebral cubist intonations?

Just . . . music. Ella. She's over 60 but her voice is that of a youngster tripping on life and love. It shows just a touch of strain as it reaches for the high notes, but reaches for the high notes, on there's still all the passion. For the time being, anyway, Ella Fitzgerald's Dream Dan-cing has taken over my brain. I hear it everywhere. Jeez, she's so smooth. Her group is just preat: 20 musicians conducted great: 20 musicians conducted by Nelson Riddle, with Bill Watrous on trombone. John Heard on bass, and Louie Bellson on the tubs.

And I musn't forget the material. What makes this album especially worth listening to is the concept it's hung on:

namely, Cole Porter. All 15 cuts on this LP are Cole Porter tunes. "I've Got You Under My Skin," "My Heart Belongs To Daddy," "At Long Last Love." I didn't think a young hipter like me was supposed to dig such lush stuff, but guess again.

I guess it just proves that all good music is hip music, if you just open your ears wide

Title IX: uncertainty prevails

The Spartan Open, held each July on the Grand River, has always been a favorite among competitive water skiers. The reason is simple: the water is always glass-smooth.
"At our site, the water is nice and smooth, even if the weather outside is bad," said Lansing resident Jackie Schraft, who, with her husband Sherm, directs the tournament. "People like skiing here because they can often qualify for the nationals."

nationals.

But more than just nice water has kept the Spartan Open a success in its 10-year history. Schraft said it takes the work of a lot of volunteers, and she expects this weekend's tournament to be a success, too.

"As of now, I've got about 60 entries, and I usually get about 30 more in the last week," she said. "We'll have some excellent controversy. And just where the University stands regarding efforts to comply with Title IX in athletics remains uncertain. The situation is foggy, to say the least.

Title IX of the Federal Education Amendments of 1972 states: "No person... shall, on the basis of sex, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program receiving federal financial assistance." As particular division, the length of the tow rope is shortened.

In jumping, the skier goes over a ramp, and distances of over 130 feet are not uncommon. The tricks competition is done on shorter "trick-skis."

Admission to the tournament, which will be held at the Lansing Boat Club across the Grand River from Moores Park, is Lansing Boat Club across the Grand River from Moores Park, is free. The tourney is sponsored by Capital City Water Ski Club and competition begins at 8 a.m. on both Saturday and Sunday. "It's city park property, so we couldn't charge money if we wanted to," Schraft said. "Besides, we're not in it to make money. Water skiers are like one big happy family."

Although there are often good turnouts at water-skiing tournaments in Michigan, the sport has never really caught on a tournaments in Michigali, the spot has a spectator sport.

That could all change this year.

Tivoli Gardens, a beautiful water-skiing facility in Brighton, will host the nationals Aug. 23 through 27. In past years, the nationals have been held in Berkeley, Calif., miami, Fla. and Tomahawk, Wis.

"The bids are put in a year ahead of time, and you must give a slide presentation and written presentation to the committee." Schraft said. "It's a pretty expensive bid. I think the fact that far as sports is concerned, Title IX does not require schools to ar as sports is concerned, Itte 1A does not require schools to spend equal amounts on women's and men's athletics teams. The law mandates sufficient expenditures to give women's teams equal opportunities with the men's teams.

Have the opportunities been equal? Should revenue-producing sports be included under Title IX regulations? Is MSU making sufficient efforts to upgrade the quality and funding of women's sports? Is MSU in danger of losing federal funding?

The answers to these questions depend, simply, on who you ask. "It's very difficult to fund a well-rounded, comprehensive athletic program for men and women," MSU athletic director Joe Kearney said. "With the increased responsibility for women's sports, it's kind of like one department asking to be two with no additional resources.

"We feel we are funding women in the top echelon in the nation. My feelings have been known for years, I don't think it makes any sense to compare revenue sports for compliance. I'd rather wait and let one or two women's sports move into the revenue sports category.

Assistant athletic director in charge of women's athletics Nell Jackson takes a stance diametrically opposite Kearney's.

"I would tend to think that if HEW checked the University now, they would find us not in compliance with Title 1X." Jackson said. "Although the (Athletic) department has made some efforts, we are still short.

"Based on how Title IX is written, it does not exempt revenue-producing sports from compliance."

Although the rift between these two administrators may not be as great as it seems, both are very unclear as to what exactly will occur after tomorrow's deadline. Kearney said he thinks the Department of Health. Education and Welfare will check universities. Jackson said she "has not been informed of the procedure HEW will use.

procedure HEW will use."

Louis Mathis, an HEW official, said Wednesday "the institutions which will be checked out first have been determined by the regional offices months in advance."

Mathis said HEW Secretary Joe Califano announced at a press conference Wednesday that he is sending a letter to all university presidents reminding them of the July 21 deadline.

Jackson and assistant athletic director in charge of academics, Clarence Underwood, are two members of an affirmative action committee at MSU taking an overall look at Title IX, MSU's compliance level and making recommenda-

Deadline for Title IX compliance Friday; situation at MSU uncertain

Jackson said Wednesday the committee is "about halfway" through its work, which is interesting, considering the deadline for compliance is tomorrow. Jackson said she isn't supposed to discuss any of the recommendations the committee may be considering, but the State News has learned that one area being looked into is a considerable increase in the amount of financial aid for female athletes.

According to Kearney, the dollar expenditures for women's athletics indicate increased emphasis and assistance being given by MSU. Jackson agrees that the funds have been increased significantly, but she said budgets can be misleading. Let the numbers speak for themselves.

Intercollegiate sports for women at MSU were started in 1972 and were initially not given any funding. In 1974, women's sports were allocated $80,000, so they had a head start on many other schools. But, at the time, MSU still gave nary a cent to women for financial aid.

other schools. But, at the time, asset stin gave half and women for financial aid.

When Kearney came to MSU in April of 1976, the women's sports budget was $175,000. He points out the increases that have been made which amount to the following: $254,000 in 1976-77 and $360,000 out of a total budget of $3.7 million in 1977.78.

The budget for next year has not been officially approved yet, but Kearney said women's athletics will probably be allocated $500,000 out of a total budget of $4.2 million. The budget for the athletic department is self generated. "UCLA is known as the epitome of what is happening in women's athletics, and their budget for next year is also $500,000." Kearney said, when asked to compare MNU to other schools.

Jackson, however, said budget figures can be misleading and a lot depends on the University. She said a lot also depends on supportive services (Kearney said women's athletics will get $240,000 out of the total $1.2 million allocated in this area. And then there's the ever-present problem of inflation which.

when taken into consideration, doesn't make the funding increases seem like that much.

"It all depends on the University," Jackson said. "Even though we started our program earlier, we were late in granting financial aid, so we've had to overcome a two-year head start the other schools had."

head start the other schools had."

Coaches for women's sports at MSU have often complained about how hard it is to recruit with the limited scholarship money given to each sport. And it seems they have a point singe only $60,000 in scholarship money was given to women's sports for the 1977-78 year while $630,000 was given to men's teams, according to athletic department figures.

Jackson said the two areas where more administrative support and funding is needed are financial aid and salaries for coaches. She also stressed a need for looking at the spending pattern of money to make sure there is no waste. Availability and size of facilities is an issue, too.

"A budget of $500,000 is certainly an improvement," Jackson said. "To be in minimum compliance with Title IX, a budget of hetween $700,000 and $800,000 is necessary."

Last April, the MSU women's basketball team filed a Title IX compliance complaint with MSU Title IX Coordinator Mary Pollock (who has since been fired, some say for her vocal support of compliance to Title IX for revenue sports). But the team has taken the complaint off-campus, and it is in the hands of HEW now.

With knowledge of this complain, it seems logical that HEW will be knocking on MSU's door soon.

When HEW does come knocking, what will be the result?

"If the federal government says we're not in compliance, we'll have to get in compliance," Kearney said. "We can't jeopardize the money (in access of $30 million) that we get in federal

Court ruling will not affect affirmative action

By OWEN ULLMANN
WASHINGTON (AP) — Allan Bakke is by now a house hold name. Brian F. Weber is

But it is Weber's court challenge that now poses the more serious threat to government efforts to improve job oppor-tunities for minorities by giving them preference in hiring and Bakke, the white Californian reverse discrimination case in the Supreme Court, and will be admitted in the fall to the medical school that had rejected him in favor of a minority applicant.

For all the attention focused on the Bakke case, government lawyers say it will have scant impact on federal efforts to ombat job discrimination.

It is Weber, a white Louisiana factory worker seeking to learn a craft, whose reverse discrimination case has the Equal Employment Oppor-tunity Commission worried The people who run the EEOC say "affirmative action" programs won't be slowed by the Supreme Court ruling that Bakke was a victim of reverse discrimination. EEOC lawyers say the agen still can make employers correct past job discrimination with affirmative action, giving preference to minorities and The Bakke ruling voided as too rigid the California school's special minorities admission program, but it allows race to be considered in admissions decisions if it is not the sole pears to leave the status quo for law enforcement and anti-discrimination work in the em ployment field," said Eleanor Holmes Norton, the EEOC's chairpereson.

She is less certain about Weber's suit, which has not reached the Supreme Court. In that case, a U.S. Court of Appeals ruled that giving pref-erence to blacks is illegal, unless past bias against them by the organization involved has been proven.

Thus, the issue: May a com pany with no proven or admit ted history of bias legally adopt an affirmative action program?

The Supreme Court has not confronted that question, and Norton says that until it does, government efforts to eliminate job bias through affirmative action may suffer.

The EEOC contends that if the Weber ruling stands, employers may stop undertaking voluntary affirmative actions. If that happens, "the whole law enforcement system in anti-discrimination has gone be-serk, says Norton. Weber, a white employee of Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Co. in Gramercy, La., sued after Kaiser sought to add blacks in some crafts by train ing one black for each white until black representation reached 39 percent. Weber was denied the training.

The program, under a new contract with the United Steel Workers union, did not result from any charge or admission of job bias. A. U.S. Court of Appeals ruled 2-1 in New Orleans last November that an employers who has not actually discrimin ated against blacks violates the law by preferring blacks for job The Weber decision puts employers in a bind:

'No law enforcement agency could ever sue everybody in violation. You must do most of it by deterrence. If they (emwait to be sued, the whole law enforcement system in anti-discrimination has gone be-

Underscoring this are agency statistics showing that the EEOC took legal action on fewer than 500 of the 80,000 job complaints

Trying to skirt the Weber ruling, the EEOC advises employers to adopt affirmative action programs when there is a "reasonable" basis to believe the first head discriminated in the firm has discriminated in the past.

Meanwhile, EEOC attorneys are deciding whether to appea to the Supreme Court. One said the Weber case "does not address the key issues as clearly as we would like," and thus risks a Supreme Court review that would not produce a definitive ruling.

The EEOC also is worried about a U.S. District Court suit brought by the Detroit Police Officers Association. It accused the city of reverse discrimination by reserving for blacks half of all promotions to sergeant.

Norton said the district court judge ruled last February that you not only have to come in and say you discriminated, you have to prove you discrimin ated."

An EEOC attorney, who asked not to be named, said this "could kill all future settlements," in which employers agree to affirmative without admitting bias.

The promises were restated at the just-completed meeting of industrial nation leaders in Bonn, West Ger many, when Carter pledged to cut both the rate of domestic inflation and the use of imported oil. The problem with such

At this moment, the pres-

Sami Esmail is a terrorist and his friends and associates say he is much too intelligent and compassionate to engage in violence.

But it is obvious where Esmail's sympathies lie, and that in itself is troublesome in the eyes of the Israeli govern-the Israeli government and we are absolutely positive that he is not a member of any guerrilla organization," argued Esmail's brother Basim. On the other hand, there are the suspect confessions. Allegedly Esmail wrote a seven-page confession on Dec. 27 in English. Later that same night and early in the morning of Dec. 28 he wrote two more pages in English. Later that day the confession was translated into Hebrew.

There are inequities in the documents. In the text of these documents, however, details of Esmail's 1976 trip to Libya make too much sense to he "total fabrications" as Basim Esmail called them. The confessions do mesh enough to indi-cate some degree of involve-ment with the PFLP.

"The fact that he wrote a confession is really inconsistent with the charges of pressure, declared Marvin Zalman, MSU assistant professor of criminal justice. "He is not a dyed-in-the-wool terrorist but he did get involved with the PFLP."

Esmail's degree of involve-nent in the PFLP is unclear but Israel apparently felt it sufficient to justify its action. The second question is whether Esmail received humane and legally defensible arrest to the time of his

It appeared that Esmail did indeed receive something close to what the United States calls "due process". Under Israel's ostensibly democratic system ostensibly democratic system Esmail was arrested, charged, given a preliminary hearing nd brought to trial

The confessions, taken Dec 27 and 28, were the major pieces of evidence used to convict Esmail. The prelimi-nary hearing or "mini-trial" held from March 14 to 30 was to decide if the confessions constituted valid evidence.

Under Israel's system a court must determine that a confession is given voluntarily. Charges have been leveled that the Israeli court is a puppet and will always rule against Pales tinians or their sympathizers, but precedent disputes these

An article published in the June 2 edition of the New York Times by Monroe H. Freedman and Alan M. Dershowitz de-clares, "In one recent Israeli case (which received no inter national attention) six Arabians were accused of membership in terrorist organization and burning a bus. The court sup pressed their confession and freed them despite finding that there was no torture on the grounds that the government had not satisfied its high bur den of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the confessions were voluntary.'

disagreement was more one of semantics than of intent and added that the committee would be taking both areas into consideration when reviewing candidates.

Blatt said if he had to choose between a president competent in either the fiscal or academic area, he would put his money on the erson qualified in academics.

The AAUP officers also exhibited strong feelings concerning the type of leadership the new president should demonstrate.

"I would like to see the University take a leadership role," Blatt He further defined this role as one where the University initially agrees with legislation that requires it to adhere to a specific policy. He said the University should not adhere to it only after they have disputed and been proved wrong in court. Another rationale for selecting a president with a predominantly academic background, Blatt mentioned, was the effective inantly academic background, Blatt mentioned, was the effectiveness the vice president for finance and his staff would have in guiding the president in budget and fiscal matters. Henry Dykema, director of financial aides, told the AAUP representatives that the committee was looking for a cand who was a combination of both qualities.

Collette Moser, member of the state AAUP executive committee, told the search committee that what was needed was a president who could implement decisions from the top on down the administratiave ladder, rather than having the administrators make the decisions and the president simply react to them.

"The president should set the basic policy system that the University is to have," Moser said.

Esmail defense committee members said they see this as a dangerous concept and "Israel is claiming that its legal jurisdiction extends on a world wide

Israel could have given Esmail a much stiffer sentence up to 10 years in prison. The fact that Israel gave him a much more lenient punishment may be significant.

The 15-month sentence, sub-evidence that Israel subscribes to this philosophy, or that it has done this kind of thing in the violent terrorist.

Israel must face the reality that by keeping Esmail behind bars it is fueling anti-Israel sentiment worldwide.

However, releasing Esmail courtesy.

The fact is that Esmail was in prior to the legal termination of his sentence might damage the credibility of Israel's legal pro-cess. Early release would be an indication that the proceedings were specifically an interna-tional political show.

Questions arise as to who, if anyone, gained from the vast amounts of publicity generated by the Sami Esmail case. The Esmail committee says Israel used Esmail as an example to other Palestinians. Some people feel the Esmail committee used Esmail to promote and publicize the case of the PFLP and other pro-Palestinian ter-rorist organizations.

It is difficult to say who the winners and losers are in this case. And the debate is likely to

Language lab: hope for speech handicappers

By MARY LUCILLE HOARD State News Staff Writer

At MSU's Artificial Lang-At MSU's Artificial Lang-uage Lab, history is rapidly being made. People who do not have the ability to speak no longer need live in silence. Often, handicappers with ac-tive, alert minds can not com-mand their essential speech organs. For them, education in usual fashion, in mainsteam classrooms, becomes almost impossible. Society erroneously labels them retarded,

"Throughout history, we have assigned negative mental and moral characteristics to those who speak differently than outselves." John Eulen burg, co-director of the lab, Eulenberg, a former linguist from Stanford University, was visiting MSU in 1972 and found himself enthusiastic about the work begun by computer spe-cialist Morteza Rahimi. Because of Rahimi's work, Eulenberg decided to stay in East Lansing. Combining computer science, linguistics and engineering, the language lab team has been developing communication aids with the potential to change lives, like James Renuk's. Renuk, 24, a fourth year MSU student, has cerebral palsy and can not produce speech understandable to most

In a copyrighted article he wrote which appeared in the Washington Post Renuk said. "I get kicked about by society because I am a handicapper and a wheelchair-user. Most of the kicks I have to take are because I cannot speak the language or dreams is to be able to speak languages. Now a team of scientists and engineers is working with me on a system that will enable a person who cannot speak the language of his or her society to do so."

The language usage systems being developed have various components tailored to meet the needs of individuals. Basically they involve a computer, a keyboard and a program of information that appears on a

Plugged into the system is a voice synthesizer that has over 60 phones, or sounds used in human speech, at four different intonation levels. Letters, words or numbers entered on the keyboard are pronounced at the same time they appear on the television ication problems have always existed, said Eulenberg, public awareness has not. Nor, he added, has there been the needed chances for interdisciplinary study, which is essen-pinary study, which is essential to research.

"There's a psychological gap in our society which discourages the development of people who have experience in both linguistics and technology," he said

However, Eulenberg said, MSU is fortunate.
"The chairman of the computer science department and the dean of the College of Engineer-ing have made a solid commit-ment to allow students to pursue this type of work," he pursue this type of work," ne explained.

In Communication Outlook, an international newsletter which began publication this spring at MSU, Eulenberg summarizes another problem as the lack of an adequate delivery system for providing amproprises. system for providing appropri-ate communication aids to those

He explained that the delivery problem is much more complex and needs more specialized equivalent cialized equipment than can be mass-marketed because so many of the devices and sys-tems must be tailored to meet individual needs.

The Artificial Language Lab

has established formal con-tracts with five school districts in Michigan. Major programs include Northville Public Schools and the Wayne County Intermediate School district, which are able to provide funding to supplement other funds available to MSU.

MSU has just recently leased a computer to Northville's Moraine school, where special education students eagerly await the chance to go in and speak to the world via the keyboard.

Eulenberg, Rahimi and others make frequent trips to schools in these districts to work directly with teachers and students helping to acquaint them with their new additions

One problem with applying the lack of a centralized pro-gram at the state level that would incorporate the present localized arrangements, Eulen-

He suggested that a central rogram, using state and feder-al funds, with regulated centers for diagnosis, evaluation and professional staff training would help eliminate the problems of persons who can not obtain the devices they need.

In Renuk's article, which also Outlook, he state the problem that many others also share.

"I hope to have my own "I hope to have my own system someday. The decision is up to my society and Michigan State University. They will decide if I can have my own system. I have been waiting for 24 years. I hope they can make the right decision soon."

MSU 'camp' aids high school musicians

By SABRINA PORTER State News Staff Writer Hauntingly, the expressive strains of a flute danced over the heads of the audience and lingered above the stuffy, close air near the crowd. The lacey flounces of Kathryn Thomas' floor-length dress swayed as her movement punctuated her performance. As the last notes of the accompanying piano died away, the audience jumped to its feet with appreciative shouts and applause for the Grosse Pointe Woods flutist.

Musicians and vocalists in grades nine through 12 may apply for either or both two-week instruction sessions.

"There is a good atmosphere here and I'm having fun," said Matt Watson, a percussion student from Kalamazoo who played a sparedrum solo and a played a snaredrum solo and a sonata for timpani in the reci-

"It helps to not have a dress code like they do at some other camps, and here you can take things at your own pace." he

Wednesday night's recital was one of four highlighting a director, said the camp is a perfect opportunity for MSU faculty to get a look at potential music majors and participate in a broader range of music in-

"Our philosophy hinges on letting faculty and high school students get to know each other," he said. "We provide good educational opportunities here and this lets students know what we have to offer." Douglas Sauter, a pianist from Mt. Pleasant, concurred.

Sauter said he had heard a lot about MSU music professors
