Spartans shoot to kill, and ISU's Bird falls victim

By JOE CENTERS
State News Sports Writer

SALT LAKE CITY — "Sensational!" That's how MSU's senior Gregory Kelser felt as he watched his teammates cut away the net following the Spartans' 75-64 win Monday night over previously undefeated Indiana State University to claim the NCAA basketball title.

It was a great moment for the team's only senior, who was making his final official appearance in a Spartan uniform. But then again, it was a great moment for the whole team and all of the MSU fans.

"They're usually the loudest," Terry Donnelly said about the Spartan fans. "I think we had the most fans there. That's a credit to our program. It's really nice to have fans like that behind you all of the time."

One of the main reasons the MSU fans were so vocal Monday was because of Donnelly, a 6-foot-2, 159-pound guard from St. Louis, Mo. who scored 15 points, 13 of those in the second half when the Spartans (26-6) maintained their lead over the Sycamores (33-1).

"What kept us in the game was the great second-half performance by Terry Donnelly," said MSU coach Jud Heathcote.

Donnelly, who had stomach cramps and a 102-degree temperature Friday, hit all five of the shots he took from the floor, and five of six from the foul line down the stretch.

"It means a lot to me as a player to go into the final game and score 15 points," said Donnelly, who averaged only 6.3 points per game this season. "Fifteen points in any game is good for me because I'm not a scorer like a Greg Kelser or an Earvin Johnson."

Speaking of Kelser and the "Magic Man", the team's two "superstars," as coach Jud Heathcote frequently calls them lived up to their titles.

Although both ran into some early foul trouble, each had his usual complete game. Magic scored 24 points, pulled down 10 rebounds and dished off five assists, while "Special K" chipped in with 19 points, eight rebounds, and, taking a chapter out of Johnson's book, passed off nine assists.

The game was built up as a battle between two of the best — if not the best — college basketball players in Johnson and ISU's Larry Bird.

Bird was repeatedly named the Most Valuable Player in college basketball this season and he brought a 28.7 points and 14.8 rebounds per game average with him into

Trustees' rescission allows paid Utah trip

Seven of the eight MSU trustees attended the NCAA finals in Utah last weekend after rescinding a May 1978 resolution Friday to boycott meetings in states which have not ratified the Equal Rights Amendment.

The rescinding motion allowed the trustees and their spouses to be reimbursed for travel expenses.

At the same time, Trustee Blanche Martin, D-East Lansing, withdrew a similar rescinding motion to travel to Florida for a convention after dodging pressure from fellow trustees.

The trustees were "designated by virtue of their office as part of the official party to the 1979 NCAA Basketball Tournament in Salt Lake City, Utah" according to Friday's resolution.

The board also stated in the motion that MSU's prestige in the national championship finals would be greatly enhanced by representation of its Board of Trustees.

According to the text of the resolution passed last year, trustees needed the approval of the board's Audit Committee before they could be financially reimbursed for a trip to a non-ratified state. The committee voted unanimously Friday — but cautiously — to rescind the original motion for the Utah trip.

Carole Lick, D-Portage, said she did not feel her attendance as a trustee would "enhance" the University's image.

She said Friday she would not attend the games, but changed her mind later in the morning because President Edgar L. Harden asked the trustees to represent the University at the tournaments.

Harden had encouraged the trustees to attend the NCAA finals to provide "reasonably objective representation" from MSU. Harden was unable to attend the tournament due to two long-time engagements.

Lick said her role as a trustee would be to attend NCAA meetings to learn more about affirmative action and Title IX procedures. Jack Stack, R-Alma, was the only trustee to stay home for the games due to schedule conflict.

He opposed the idea of attending the game, saying that the trustees might be able to influence future meeting places by making the NCAA aware of the boycott.

The trustees agreed with Stack's suggestion to send a letter to the NCAA to call attention to the fact that it could influence states that have not ratified the ERA.

SPONTANEOUS PARTY FILLS STREETS

Victory spells madness for E. L.

By THE STATE NEWS

The MSU Spartan basketball team touched down at Capitol City Airport in Lansing Tuesday afternoon to a throng of hyped-up fans and a town still vibrating from the NCAA championship.

Upwards of 1,000 cheering fans, ranging from toddlers to senior citizens, greeted team members, who made a quick handshaking trip along the chain link fence next to the runway.

"It feels great," deadpanned MSU Coach Jud Heathcote, the first team member off the United Airlines jet.

"We're all still elated and still coming down to earth."

As the players emerged, the crowd roared at the sight of the NCAA trophy, held high and reflecting the setting sun.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson flashed his Grand Canyon smile, much to the crowd's delight, as his head, topped with a tweed apple cap, popped out of the door.

Some Spartans looked a bit dazed and admitted they were just beginning to realize what they had accomplished.

Following the brief reception in the chilly air at the airport, the team was whisked away in an MSU bus, with a police and fire truck motorcade to Jenison Fieldhouse for a formal celebration.

Outside Jenison, several hundred expectant fans waited for the team bus to arrive while inside, 10,000-plus noisy well-wishers jammed the ancient structure.

Department of Public Safety officers reported some fans who were turned away at the door tried entering the fieldhouse through the roof.

The list of dignitaries assembled to pay tribute to the Spartans included Gov. William G. Milliken, MSU President Edgar Harden, the mayors of East Lansing and Lansing and a little-known state legislator who attracted the only catcalls during the hour-long celebration.

Thunderous applause and cheering, coupled with numerous standing ovations, greeted each player as he stepped to the microphone after receiving a commemorative plaque.

After a deafening chorus of "Kelser, speak," senior center Gregory Kelser looked around and said with a smile, "What do you want me to say?"

"It's just starting to hit all of us what we've done," he said.

When Earvin Johnson stood up to probably the loudest ovation of the afternoon, the packed crowd began yelling "TWO MORE YEARS," hinting at the persistent rumors that Johnson will turn professional with two years of college eligibility remaining.

"All I can say is that we've got the No. 1 cheerleaders in the nation, the No. 1 basketball team and the No. 1 fans," Johnson said, beaming.

Terry Donnelly, Mike Brkovich and Ron Charles joined in praising the fans and in urging Johnson to stay at MSU.

Israeli and Egyptian leaders divided on Palestinian question despite treaty

WASHINGTON — The leaders of Israel and Egypt took different stands Tuesday on Palestinian autonomy but asked Congress to give them the weapons of war and trust them to keep peace.

Both warned of Soviet threats to freedom around the world. Egyptian President Anwar Sadat renewed a proposal for a combined municipal council of Arabs and Israelis in Jerusalem. But he declared flatly that "sovereignty in Arab Jerusalem should return to the Arabs."

Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin spoke separately to senators and congressmembers assembled in meeting rooms on their respective sides of the Capitol. Sadat elaborated on his statements during a brief meeting with reporters.

Both leaders urged approval of President Carter's proposed $4.5 billion package of loans and grants for Israel and Egypt. The package is designed to bolster the new peace between the ancient enemies, formalized in a treaty signed Monday.

Letters of agreement made public by Defense Secretary Harold Brown show the package includes accelerated delivery of F-16 fighter planes to Israel and the extension of arms sales credits to Egypt for the first time.

In a session at the Egyptian embassy, Sadat said the next round of negotiations over the future of the Palestinians would be held either in El Arish in Sinai, or Beersheba in the Negev.

He also disclosed that when he exchanges ambassadors with Israel some 10 months from now, the Egyptian envoy will be based in Tel Aviv, not Jerusalem. The United States and most other countries that have relations with Israel have embassies in Tel Aviv because of the dispute over the future of Jerusalem, part of which was captured from Jordanian forces in the 1967 war.

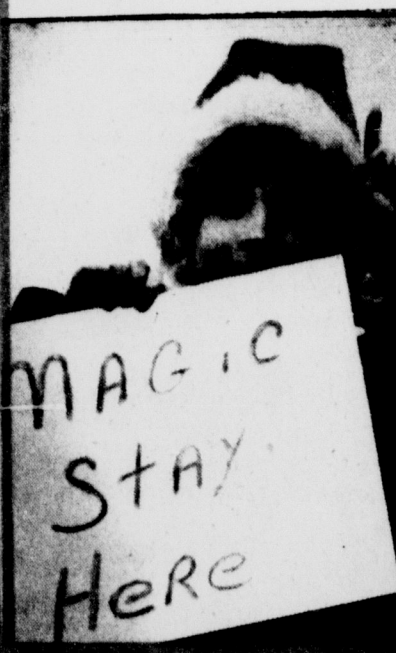

"As much as you have sentimentality towards Jerusalem," he told Israeli reporters at the embassy, "there are 700 million Arabs who have the same thing on their side. You cannot deny them their rights. . . . We shall never agree to Israeli sovereignty."

"I have an appeal to make to you," Begin told members of the Senate. "Don't doubt us. Don't doubt our intentions. Don't doubt our resolve to live in peace with our neighbors."

"We want to solve in a humane way the problem of the Palestinian Arabs," he said.

Not too late to register

Students who missed spring term registration Monday and Tuesday because they attended the NCAA basketball finals in Salt Lake City may register during the late registration period, Thursday through Tuesday. Students who can provide evidence of being at the NCAA finals, such as a ticket stub or plane ticket, will not be charged the regular late registration fee.

Iranian land rights clash leaves 30 dead

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Fighting over land rights erupted between Turkoman tribesmen and government forces in northeastern Iran, leaving at least 30 people dead and 70 wounded, witnesses said Tuesday.

The fighting started Monday when police stopped tribesmen trying to reclaim farmland from estates near the city of Gonbad-E-Qabus, 30 miles south of the Soviet border.

Witnesses said disorder spread to the city where troops loyal to the government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini fired on Turkomans demonstrating for autonomy under Iran's proposed Islamic republic.

The Turkomans, backed by leftist Fedayeen fighters, fired back, sparking citywide battles, reports from the city said. Violence and disorder flared again Tuesday before subsiding.

It was the second minority uprising in as many weeks to challenge the authority of Iran's new revolutionary government. Last week Kurdish tribesmen seeking autonomy for their region of western Iran revolted. An estimated 200 persons died in four days of fighting in the Kurdish city of Sanandaj. The Kurds finally were promised increased autonomy.

Canada to hold general elections May 22

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada's long-anticipated elections will be held May 22, House of Commons Majority Leader Allan Rock said Monday night.

In his announcement, authorized by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Rock said Parliament would be dissolved to prepare for the campaign.

The move came as no surprise, although there had been speculation Trudeau would set a June election date.

The five-year mandate for the prime minister and his Liberal Party from the last election in 1974 would have expired July 8.

Trudeau, in a nationally televised statement delivered shortly after Rock's announcement, said he would campaign for "the new economic policies required to make the 1980s a decade of development."

Amin leads troops against invaders

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Heavy firing erupted near President Idi Amin's official residence at Entebbe Tuesday but the nation's official radio said the Ugandan dictator was at the front leading his army against the Tanzanian invaders.

A resident in Entebbe contacted by telephone said there was heavy firing in the town on the shores of Lake Victoria 20 miles south of Kampala during the night and early Tuesday.

Western analysts said earlier it appeared the fighting was between troops trying to stage a coup and forces still loyal to the beleaguered Amin.

A Radio Kampala broadcast denied a report by the British Broadcasting Corp. that Amin had fled the country three days ago.

"Amin is very busy on the front line commanding operations against the Tanzanian aggressors," the radio said.

Carter orders revision of energy options

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter told his energy advisers Tuesday to rework a series of "difficult and largely unpleasant options" for dealing with the nation's fuel supply problems, his chief spokesman said.

The move will delay announcement until early April of the administration's newest proposals for limiting the use of oil.

Congressional leaders had said following a March 20 White House breakfast meeting with Carter that the president planned to go on national television this Thursday to announce a new energy plan.

But after conferring with Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger and other aides Tuesday morning, Carter "indicated less-than-complete satisfaction with some of the proposals submitted to him and asked that they be reworked," said White House press secretary Jody Powell.

"We will be announcing, certainly in the next week or so, the actions we plan to take," Powell said at a White House press briefing.

Building blamed for worker's health problems

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Research workers in a 27-story building at the University of Massachusetts say they have been suffering such health problems as headaches, dizzy spells and menstrual irregularities, and are threatening legal action against the school.

They insist their problems are directly related to the building, but school officials disagree.

Investigators found last May that workers' blood samples showed high levels of toluene, a solvent frequently used in chemistry labs. But the building, shut down for a week, was reopened after tests showed no correlation between illnesses and toluene levels.

Those affected believe the problem lies in the ventilation system — that fumes from a section housing chemistry and physics laboratories are circulating elsewhere.

Barry Averill, director of the school's health services, said there is no evidence of a hazard.

"Based on the investigation by the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health, there is no evidence that persons in the building are being exposed to a hazard. The report was critical of the building's ventilation system, but it was specific in that there is no evidence of exposure to toxic materials," he said. Averill says the ventilation system will be fixed, but it will take time.

Army explodes 26 deteriorating landmines

DUGWAY PROVING GROUNDS, Utah (AP) — The Army blew up 26 landmines believed to contain a lethal nerve agent on an isolated part of this desert testing post Tuesday, and the base commander declared: "There was no widespread contamination."

Gov. Scott Matheson, who expressed anger on learning of the plans last week, said through a spokesman that he was glad the destruction of the canisters went without incident — and he was glad it was over.

The operation involved destroying mines found in January by an Army patrol. The mines, which had evidently been discarded and forgotten during a period of open-air testing in 1963, were now deteriorating.

Their destruction was twice delayed by tricky winds before it finally was accomplished on Tuesday.

The mines were covered with several thousand pounds of plastic C4 explosives and blown up under what the Army described as ideal winds at 8:46 a.m.

Although the Army felt the operation was successful, Col. James R. Klugh said, extensive decontamination procedures will be followed "to assure ourselves that what we predicted would be the outcome."

CRUDE OIL PRICE RAISED 9 PERCENT

OPEC increase called greedy

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP)

— The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries raised crude oil prices by 9 percent Tuesday to $14.54 a barrel and authorized members to tack on any surcharges they think the market will bear.

The increase, taking effect Sunday, should raise American retail gasoline prices by about two cents a gallon and increase the American bill for foreign oil by at least $4 billion over last year's total of $43 billion. Surcharges could push the bill higher, analysts say.

In Washington, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., chairperson of the Senate Energy Committee, called the increase "greedy and a punitive doctrine" and said it is "bad news for Western institutions."

State Department spokesperson Hodding Carter called it "untimely and unjustified" and said it points up the need for strict conservation measures.

Algeria, Venezuela and Libya immediately said their countries would add surcharges to the basic rate and oil ministers here predicted other members of the 13-nation cartel would do likewise.

The base increase alone is expected to enrich OPEC nations by an additional $13.5 billion this year, analysts here say.

OPEC President Saeed Al Otaiiba of the United Arab Emirates said the next OPEC meeting, scheduled here in June, could decide on yet another hike.

He said the UAE, Saudi Arabia and other Arab "moderates" opposed stiffer increases proposed by some countries and would continue to do so in the future. He said Ecuador joined the fight to keep the increase low.

Militant members such as Iraq, Iran and Libya lobbied hard for larger increases. Iran said it favored an increase of 29 percent in the base price.

Most OPEC members added a surcharge of about $1.20 a barrel, roughly the amount of Tuesday's base price increase, onto the previous OPEC price of $13.35 when the revolution in Iran caused a shortage of crude on the world market.

The earlier surcharges were approved by OPEC as a response to what the cartel saw as profiteering by oil companies getting upwards of $20 a barrel on the short-term, or "spot" market because of the shortage caused by the temporary loss of Iranian production.

Tuesday, Algeria announced an increase of "about $4" per 42-gallon barrel over the base price, upping the price of Algerian crude by a total of more than 30 percent. Venezuela announced a surcharge of $1.20, and Libya said it would raise prices by $1.66.

The effect of the surcharges on American retail prices will depend on which countries impose surcharges and on what size they are. American pump prices rise about a cent a gallon per over-all 5 percent increase in the price of crude.

The $14.54 price to take effect Sunday was not to have gone into effect until October under a four-step series of increases OPEC approved in December.

Arafat urges reprisals

(AP) — Bomb attacks in Israel and Paris killed one person and injured more than 50 others Tuesday in a terrorist campaign against the newly signed Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat urged headline Arab leaders gathered in Baghdad, Iraq, to support the PLO's war against the treaty by ending all trade with the United States. He also urged a new oil embargo.

Arafat said, "It is taken for granted the (Egyptian President Anwar) Sadat's regime will be punished, but don't just hit the tail of the snake, hit the head of the snake — the United States."

Arafat also said, "We should stop buying big American cars and other products," because the United States "pushed Egypt and Israel into signing this deal."

There was no other immediate comment on Arafat's proposal from the foreign and economy ministers of 18 Arab nations who met in the Iraqi capital to decide how to sabotage the peace pact.

In the Israeli town of Lod, 15 miles east of Tel Aviv, a bomb exploded under a vegetable stand in an open air market. A 60-year-old woman was killed and 21 persons were injured. A vengeful Jewish mob reportedly beat up several Arab passersby until police intervened.

A bomb thrown into a hostel for Jewish students in the heart of the Paris Latin Quarter injured 32 occupants Tuesday, officials reported.

In Paris, an anonymous telephone caller said a group called the "Autonomous Joint Intervention Group Against the Zionist Presence in France and Against the Peace Treaty" was responsible for the blast. Authorities said they had never heard of the group before.

Random car stops now ruled illegal by Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled on Tuesday that police officers may not stop automobiles at random to check drivers' licenses and car registration.

The justices said random stops of motorists who are not suspected of breaking any law violate the Constitution's protection from unreasonable search and seizure.

The 8-1 decision struck down a Delaware law that had given individual police officers broad discretion in choosing cars for the routine checks. Many states allow similar police practices, which will now have to be changed.

"An individual operating or traveling in an automobile does not lose all expectation of privacy simply because the automobile and its use are subject to government regulation," Justice Byron R. White wrote for the majority.

White stressed, however, that the ruling does not bar Delaware and other states from "developing methods for spot checks that involve less intrusion or that do not involve unconstrained exercise of discretion."

White suggested that questioning all oncoming traffic at roadblock-type stops could be an alternative. Two other justices, in a concurring opinion, suggested that police could make "not purely random stops such as every 10th car to pass a given point."

The Delaware police case stemmed from a 1976 stop which led to an arrest for marijuana possession.

REFORM DIFFICULT BUT IMPROVEMENTS PLANNED

Spring term registration smooth

By JAMES KATES
State News Staff Writer

Registration for spring term generally went smoothly but it may be some time before the implementation of proposed mail or computer-terminal registration systems, Registrar Horace King said Tuesday.

King said a major obstacle to reform of the registration process is the division of responsibility between the Registrar's Office, the Controller's Office and academic departments.

Agreement on plans for a new system would have to come not only from the registrar, but also from the provost and vice president for finance, King said.

King said short-term improvements would focus on providing more personnel to answer students' questions.

"It's not possible to say when we'll see a major change in the system because there are many people who have a vote in this," he said. "But we figure that as long as students have to go through this we'll provide more people to help them."

About 200 people, including several advisers from the Registrar's Office in the class card arena, worked on spring term registration, King said.

Diane Bolagh, a first-term transfer student majoring in music therapy, said she found the registration system "baffling."

"I came from a school of 400 and I was accepted at MSU last Friday," she said. "The school had a computer-terminal system. Sometimes there were lines to get to the terminals but at least we knew right away whether we had our classes."

King said plans for updating the registration process are being studied by a task force representing University finance and academic departments as well as the Registrar's Office.

The task force is aided by the Registrar's Student Advisory Committee, which provides student proposals for changes in the registration process, he said.

Committee member Lisa Averill, a senior natural resources and environmental education major, said she did not anticipate seeing a computer-terminal or mail registration system for at least a year.

"We can't make this kind of change overnight," she said, "but what we can do is recommend feasible changes to the registrar's office."

Immediate improvements could be had by providing more personnel in the fee assessment and payment stages, she said.

Averill added she would like to see an alternative to registration-by-mail should the plan go through.

"Conventional registration provides benefits such as voter registration, voting for student offices and advising," she said. "We might look into providing a 'baby system' for those who will want to stay with the old style of registration."

Problems on divestiture focus on letter's wording

By KIM GAZELLA
State News Staff Writer

The MSU Board of Trustees haggled over wording in a letter from its investment firm concerning divestiture for the second consecutive month at its March meeting Thursday and Friday.

The board passed a resolution in March 1978, stating the University will divest its stocks from corporations with South African business links.

The letter is one of several between the board and its investment firm Scutter, Stevens and Clark.

The latest letter from the firm was a response stating it will be possible to draw up a portfolio to provide an equivalent level of quality of stocks to those the University is selling.

Board Chairperson John Bruff, D-Fraser, said though the board could not agree on the wording of the letter, he expects recommendations from the firm for withdrawing University stocks from corporations with South African holdings at next month's board meeting.

Problems at last month's meeting were over a liability clause the firm included to make it "held harmless" — or not held responsible for possible consequences of the trustees' divestiture resolution.

The problem was resolved in a telephone conference made March 1 by administrators and trustees to clear up the legal difficulties.

The call was termed "helpful" by Roger Wilkinson, vice-president for business and finance, because it cleared up any misunderstandings between the two parties about the liability procedures.

The most recent conflict arose from the differences in two letters written by Scutter, Stevens and Clark Nov. 21, and March 9.

Two attorneys on the board, Bruff and Raymond Krolikowski, D-Birmingham, were concerned that the word changes in the second letter changed the meaning of the first letter.

The firm's letter stated as before that it is possible to construct a portfolio with diverse stocks to replace those being sold for divestiture purposes.

The November letter said the portfolio would have to be constructed carefully to "gain exposure in a number of specific industries."

The March letter changed the wording of the sentence to say that the ability to gain exposure in specific industries would be "constricted."

"I'd like a reinsertion of the Nov. 21 letter here," Bruff said.

He suggested that a letter be sent to the firm to ensure the meaning was the same in both letters.

Board members reacted differently, each suggesting different ways to resolve the problem.

"I suggest we get a clear expression of intent," Krolikowski said.

"I suggest we go back to the letter of Nov. 21," Bruff said.

"I suggest we get a new investment company — one in New York," Radcliffe said. He has suggested hiring a new firm for the past three months and has threatened to make a formal motion to do so if steps to divest are not taken soon.

Bruff said he doubts it will be necessary to hire a new investment firm as Radcliffe suggested because the process would have to begin again and it would take too much time.

"I think we'll get it straightened out with the letter and go ahead with the recommendations at the next meeting," he said.

Bruff said a letter will be sent to the firm, but he added the confusion will not delay the withdrawal recommendations.

"They (the firm) understand that they are to proceed with making the recommendations as planned," he said. "We expect to have them at the next board meeting."

PIRGIM and utility back to court again

A new trial date will be set as the legal battle continues between Lansing's Board of Water and Light and PIRGIM.

Steve Freedkin, PIRGIM executive director said the board is raising several issues that PIRGIM contends are already resolved. Ingham County Circuit Court Judge Thomas Brown said at a pre-trial hearing March 12 that he will hear the case, Freedkin added.

PIRGIM filed suit in August against the board under the state Freedom of Information Act to obtain documents pertaining to the Board's proposed purchase of power from the Consumer's Power Co. Midland nuclear plant.

Brown issued a summary judgment in the case stating that the board is subject to the information act.

The board released the documents to PIRGIM the day after suit was filed, but PIRGIM chose to pursue the suit to establish that the board is subject to the act.

The new trial will determine whether PIRGIM will receive $2,100 in court costs from the board, as is required under the information act.

The board will raise the issue of whether it had to release the documents in the first place, Freedkin said.

He said the board is also trying to set precedent for a 10-day extension before responding to the information request for the reason that its "attorney was unavailable" at the time.

There is a five working-day deadline for response under the act, but 10-day extensions are granted in certain cases. The board wants a determination on whether its 10-day extensions was constitutional, thereby setting a precedent, Freedkin said. "The circuit court does not set precedents," he added, claiming the case would be moot on that issue.

Board of Water and Light spokespersons were unavailable for comment.

Firefighters win battle for hours

East Lansing firefighters have won their two-year battle against a 40-hour work week.

Firefighters Local 1609 and the city of East Lansing accepted a decision rendered by a state arbitrator Friday night ruling against eight-hour shifts for firefighters.

Although the city's firefighters will retain their current work schedule of 24 hours on the job followed by two days off, their total work hours per week will be reduced from 56 to 50.4. They will have one additional day off every month.

Union president Darwin Ranes said firefighters opposed a 40-hour work week because though the city would have hired 10 additional persons, it would have reduced the number of staffers on duty at any given time.

"There would be more men, but less men on duty," Ranes said. "This would have increased the work load at the scene for each individual firefighter."

The arbitrator opted for the city's proposed wage package which included a 6 percent increase for the first year of a new contract and 5 percent for the second year. The pay hikes are retroactive to when their contract last expired in July 1977.

Ranes said an additional stumbling block in the negotiation process was the promotional procedure employed by the city.

The city had no systematic methods for promotions, he said, and firefighters had attempted to revamp the procedure.

He said a compromise was worked out on the promotional procedures, but did not specify the terms.

Mayor's recommendation may mean new tax hikes

By RUSS HUMPHREY
State News Staff Writer

An increase in taxes may be in store for Lansing residents if Mayor Gerald W. Graves' recommendations for the 1979-80 budget are approved by the City Council.

Graves asked for a $4.1 million increase in the general fund budget at Monday night's regular City Council meeting.

The need for the increase, he said partly stems from contract settlements with the Lansing Independent Employees Unions and the police and fire departments made last year and early in 1979.

But the city may face tax increases if federal revenue sharing is eliminated, Graves said. The city could lose about $3 million dollars generated annually from revenue sharing, he said.

"If the revenue sharing is eliminated," Graves said, "the city would have to raise property taxes by about $3.50 per $1,000 of state equalized valuation, or lay off over 170 employees."

The mayor's budget also includes asking voters to approve bonds for a $750,000 asphalt plant, expanding fire stations, widening Aurelius Road and developing city parks.

The costs for the proposed projects would total $5 million and would be financed by long term bonds spread over a 20-year period, Graves said in his recommendation.

The annual cost to taxpayers would be about 50 cents for every $1,000 of assessed property value, Graves said.

The most prominent increase in the new budget is the hike in costs for public safety workers. Graves said the increase occurred because of contract settlements that will cost the city about $8.4 million.

The major benefits provided, primarily through collective bargaining agreements, include retirement payments for police and fire fighters, medical insurance, general employment retirement and longevity payments.

Graves said he would rather retain the current tax rate of $10.70 for every $1,000 of assessed value. But he added that "economic predictions indicate a high probability of economic slowdown or even another recession in the upcoming fiscal year."

Graves also touched upon other problems that the city, especially financial cutoffs from the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act.

He recommended the establishment of permanent positions in the areas where CETA personnel have been employed.

Handicappers will have access to the Union by Sept. 15 due to the approval Friday of over $800,000 in contracts by the MSU Board of Trustees.

The nod comes after scores of student and non-student requests were issued to make the facility accessible to handicappers, especially wheelchair users.

The Board also approved contracts for the construction of the Communication Arts Center totaling $21.5 million.

Under the Union contracts, an exterior ramp will be added to the west side of the building which will lead to a new lobby and elevator created for handicapper use.

Existing toilet facilities will also be remodeled to provide access to handicappers and two wheelchair lifts will be installed to make stairways more accessible.

The Union will also undergo alterations to make the facility comply with fire marshal requirements.

The new Communications Arts Center will be completely funded by capitol outlay monies, which are state funds granted to construct or maintain buildings. The project is expected to start next month, with completion slated for 1982.

The approval culminates a drive started in the late 1950s to create such a facility, said MSU President Edgar L. Harden.

"We're a little slow, but we've made it," he said.

Harden added projected costs in the construction of the building have more than doubled in the past 20 years.

The board also awarded contracts to make alterations in Morrill Hall including division of smaller office spaces, carpet installation and refinishing existing walls.

Exterior campus lighting will also undergo some alterations under board contracts totaling $46,000 awarded at the meeting.

New lighting fixtures will be installed in 15 new areas around campus, while five other areas will receive replaced or re-located fixtures.

The project had strong backing from the ASMSU Student Board, said Roger Wilkinson, vice-president for business and finance.

Thank you, Spartans, for a memory we'll cherish

We're number one! And nothing could feel better.

When Magic lobbed that near-full court pass to Special K in the closing seconds of the game and Gregory took the ball like he has so many times this season and rammed it through the rim, this town and campus exploded with ecstasy. What a team. What a game. What a feeling.

Although it was Jud Heathcote and his men who had to do the real fretting and sweating, it was our victory and our celebration. To those who have not missed a single televised game it was the ultimate joy. Gregory Kelsner and Earvin Johnson, because of the special quality of their personalities, are beyond being merely appreciated. When we speak of the two it is as if they are our brothers. It is as if we are all such tight buddies that after the games they drop by, have a beer and tell us all about the victory we just shared.

Most of us have never met them or even seen them in person, but it doesn't matter. We know instinctively that there are no two people in the world who are finer than Earvin and Greg.

How can this community possibly express the gratitude that it feels for the Spartans of 1979? Last night 10,000 people were over in Jenison Fieldhouse trying to do just that. A parade is planned for today down Michigan Avenue to the Capitol. That old road will probably feel as many feet as it did nine years ago when thousands of protesters headed down the same path. But the mood of the 1979 parade will be just the opposite from the last mass march — the mood today is satisfaction.

Ironically, the biggest winners are not the individual players, the team or even the fans. The biggest winner is MSU as an institution. While the team of 1978-79 will never be forgotten, by late next fall a new season will have begun. We'll have to do this all over again, we hope.

But the benefits this one season have brought to this University are beyond comprehension. Although the $125,000 the team will bring back from its network television exposure is obviously nice, and although the thousands of dollars worth of scholarships that Earvin and Gregory racked up by consistently being the Most Valuable Players anyone has seen in a while is also nice, the best part about it all is that this season has set MSU in forward motion that will gather momentum as time goes on.

Recruitment should be a pleasure for Jud Heathcote. Any high school athlete who has followed the Spartans in their romp through the NCAA tourney is well aware that there is more than basketball between the members of Jud's squad. In the coldness of big money intercollegiate athletics, the love exhibited by our team members is something that a price can never be put on, it is something that cannot be bought, and because of that, it is Jud's best selling point to high school seniors.

Possibly the most surprising winner in all of this is John Hannah. As the person in charge of extracting donations from loyal alumni, Hannah should find his job to be a comparative breeze in the next few months. Though MSU has graduated millions of people with scores of different kinds of degrees, it is athletics — nationally prominent athletics — that tie those far-flung people together. It's in every paper, on every television set, every radio. Sports Illustrated will most assuredly sing praises to the Spartans and MSU alumni everywhere will know that their alma mater has a basketball team that is number one in the entire nation. And when people are reminded with front page headlines that they graduated from MSU, the hearty donations are bound to follow.

Everyone who anxiously awaits the new Performing Arts Center, even if they've never watched a Spartan basketball game (heaven forbid!) should be eternally grateful. Everyone who champions the projects of the Enrichment Program — the endowed faculty chairs, updating the Library, building a new museum — must realize the tremendous boost the Spartans have given those projects.

Even those people who have the unenviable task of wrangling bucks from the state Legislature should find the job a little easier for a while. Everyone loves the winner and there are no bigger winners in the state of Michigan than the Spartans of MSU.

Thank you, Gregory Kelsner for being the class person that you are. Thank you, Earvin Johnson for showing us the proper perspective on competition. And thank you the Spartans of 1979 for bringing us a championship that will live in our minds forever.

BRUCE GUTHRIE

We are not at the mercy of landlords

Oh! Reaume and Dadds! Why didn't you go into an honest field instead of becoming an apartment managing firm?

For the past nine months now, I've lived in Norwood Apartments on Grand River. Norwood is managed by a firm called Reaume and Dadds. The name should be familiar to many students at MSU because it manages 366 apartment units in the East Lansing area, comprising 7 percent of the apartment units immediately around the MSU campus.

My roommate and I moved into this apartment last June and almost immediately started having problems with Reaume and Dadds.

Our apartment is on the top floor of a three-floor structure. In the afternoon, the temperature races up the thermometer and strangles you.

The first thing I did when I stepped into the room was turn on the air conditioner. I unpacked a little and noticed that the unit wasn't doing a damn thing except making noise. We immediately complained about it.

As the temperature rose in the apartment, it was apparent that Reaume and Dadds was not overly anxious to fix our air conditioner. The company's office told me that our apartment couldn't be that hot. They were wrong.

After almost a week of being ignored, we notified Reaume and Dadds that we were deducting rent for each full day the unit did not work. During dinner that evening, a maintenance person came around. It was their first visit. He told us the unit was broken. We were not impressed. He told us it would take a couple of days to get it fixed.

An hour or so later, however, they brought in a new air conditioner. We were told that it was just a temporary one and that they would fix the original one and bring it back. We still have the temporary.

We deducted the rent for the week the unit did not work and Reaume and Dadds promptly delivered a "Notice to Quit." These notices basically say pay up or be prepared to be hauled to court. We had the ASMSU legal attorney, with whom we had consulted throughout, write Reaume and Dadds to say we would be defended. They did not try to evict us.

I was somewhat angry at Reaume and Dadds for the notice and tried to get the East Lansing Fire Department to force the management corporation to put fire extinguishers in the apartment complex. The fire marshal sent me a notice that the building was inspected in 1973 and found then to violate safety standards by not having enough fire extinguishers. He said he wasn't going to do anything about the violation but we were of course free to buy an extinguisher ourselves and deduct the cost from our rent. Thinking of the first Notice to Quit, I abandoned that idea.

For the next five months, we were fairly decent tenants. Then, by November, it started to get cold for a change and we discovered we had no heat in the apartment. We complained and — presto! — the heat was turned on. It took awhile before we discovered that the heat would not turn off no matter where we set the thermostat.

Just like in the summer, the apartment was too hot. We kept hearing about energy shortages while we lived in an 82-degree room with the windows open. We complained again and again and again. The people in the Reaume and Dadds office began to recognize our voices over the phone. Repair people came out a couple of times, played with wires and pipes for awhile, but never fixed the heat.

While the world outside was a frozen wasteland, we lived in an inferno. I talked to other Reaume and Dadds' tenants and was told I was lucky to have heat at all. Apparently, Reaume and Dadds isn't that good when it comes to heat. But then, they weren't too good when it came to turning on the lights in the hallways, fixing hall doors, plowing and shoveling, either.

In early February, I was fed up. I called the Tenants Resource Center and talked with the ASMSU attorneys again. I notified Reaume and Dadds that we would not pay rent until the heat was fixed.

Reaume and Dadds responded with stern warnings which sounded more like threats. "You'd better put the money in an escrow account," I was told. "If you don't, we'll take you to court like that." An "escrow account," for those who aren't familiar with these things, is a separate account into which money is deposited and from which it cannot be withdrawn until certain pre-conditions are met. In our case, it would probably be stipulated that the money automatically go to Reaume and Dadds if the heat was fixed.

I checked with the Tenants Resource Center and ASMSU. No. An escrow account was not required. Simply set up an ordinary savings account at your bank. When rent is due, put the money in the account to prove you had the money and were not withholding rent simply because you were broke.

March 1. Rent is due. I wrote a letter to Reaume and Dadds explaining what we had done and giving the account number of the new account. Reaume and Dadds said we were legally required to put the money into an escrow account and gave us a few days to provide them with an escrow account number.

I checked back with the Tenants Resource Center and ASMSU. An escrow account was not required. Reaume and Dadds called in a week to get the escrow account number and I told them there would be no escrow account number because no account was required. Another Notice to Quit appeared that afternoon and it was vowed that we would be immediately dragged to court. (Someone must work full time at Reaume and Dadds churning out those notices.)

I wrote to Reaume and Dadds, telling them why we did not have an escrow account number. I said that I suspected they were simply trying to scare us into paying our rent. Reaume and Dadds apparently does that sort of thing if tenants get uppity.

March 15. A cigar-smoking plumber knocks at the door. "Here to fix the heat," he says. "Sure is hot in here," he adds. A Reaume and Dadds lackey is with him. Within an hour, the heat is fixed.

Although it's fixed, it's now hot enough outside that the sunshine warms us up to an even 80 degrees anyway. Reluctantly, we've paid the rent.

In the end, we really didn't win much for all our hassles. Reaume and Dadds cowed us from withholding rent sooner although we had every legal right to do so. We acted too late to have the adjustable heat do much good.

But from the experience, I learned that as tenants we can fight back. We can deduct or withhold rent legally in some cases. We can protect our legal rights from being entirely cowed by faceless corporations. We can. Before we do, though, we must learn what our rights are and how to assert them. Only then will landlords start treating us like people instead of quantities of rent.

In the case of Reaume and Dadds, this may take a major effort on our part. But we must make that effort. If we keep putting up with this crap, they'll fleece us like so many sheep.

Incidentally, the day after I wrote the rough draft of this column, a man appeared at the door with a summons to appear in court this Friday for non-payment of rent although we had paid up almost a week before. We have been given less than a week to prepare. Reaume and Dadds is at it again.

VIEWPOINT: PUBLIC ACCESS

Bruff explains the trustees' intentions

By JOHN B. BRUFF

Your editorial of March 7, titled "Trustees — public when convenient" requires my response.

You are entitled to your opinion of the MSU Board of Trustees; however, let me respond to some of the allegations in that editorial.

Primarily, the State News editorial challenges the board's commitment to providing for public comment at our regular monthly board meetings. Prior to the Open Meeting Act, I was the author of the proposal to have public comment session at the regular MSU board meetings, which has been the practice for nearly two years.

In structuring our board meetings January 1979, the Board of Trustees accepted my proposal that public comment be changed from the Thursday evening session to Friday afternoons at 1 p.m. prior to the "Action Session" of the board. This change was required because the Board of Trustees wished to devote Thursday evenings to briefing sessions where an in-depth discussion of issues of importance to the University could be presented and commented on by the public; so, in fact, the change provides two opportunities for public comment. Objections were stated that the public would have more difficulty attending on Friday afternoon at 1 p.m., especially students and faculty. It was stated by the undersigned at the January board meeting that any persons unable to make public comment in the afternoon would be provided an alternative time.

In my opinion, the new procedure provides greater opportunity for public comment in that all the committee sessions are scheduled so all trustees can attend and the public, of course, has notice of the committee meetings and the right to comment at said committee meetings. The public is in a better position to make their views known on matters that are considered by our sub-committee in the areas of investment, health, audit, lands, and affirmative action.

The State News has the right to criticize and disagree with the trustee action; however, the inference that this was a move to make our meetings less public is, in my opinion, inaccurate and not justified by the facts.

Terminal location for city buses, taxis established

By SHEILA BEACHUM
State News Staff Writer

A proposed downtown Lansing transportation terminal has finally found a location.

The Capital Area Transportation Authority Board of Directors recently backed the $3 million structure's future location at the Grand Avenue and Kalamazoo Street intersection.

The terminal will house city buses, inter-city buses, taxis and limousine service to the railroad center and airport.

While many city officials say that the site is not ideal for the terminal, most agree that it seems to be the most logical.

CATA officials favored the location because of the availability of land for the structure and its "nearly unoccupied" status, said CATA Planning and Grants Manager Richard Leonard.

CATA and Lansing officials had expressed concern about the negative aspects of the current Lansing transfer point of city bus services at Michigan Avenue and Grand Avenue.

Officials were also concerned that the Grand Avenue and Kalamazoo Street site would prove to be a greater inconvenience for two key groups of people using CATA services — downtown office workers and Lansing Community College students.

"We don't have a desirable situation now," Leonard said. Although it may be a greater inconvenience, he said, it will improve safety for the city's bus riders and will not have a "negative impact on ridership."

In the staging "pulse type system" buses sit for as long as seven minutes before departing, Leonard said.

The current transfer point for buses is unsafe for people making bus-to-bus transfers and waiting buses contribute to the traffic congestion in that area, especially at rush hour, Leonard said.

Once CATA buses are moved to the terminal, much of the congestion at the current staging sites will be eliminated, Leonard said.

The transportation terminal will be a "building block for some of the other things the city wants to attain," he said.

Those plans include the construction of a shopping mall at South Washington Square, hotel-convention center, sports arena and exhibition hall.

"One of the last hurdles is for the state to approve the project," Leonard said.

"The state will bear the major costs of construction," he said. Construction costs have been estimated at $2.5 million.

Nearly $600,000 is needed for purchase of the land. That amount will be financed through a federal grant or local funds of a combination, said Kunwar Rajendra, Lansing Transportation Planning coordinator.

Once the state Department of Highways and Transportation approves the project, construction could begin in October, Leonard said.

The CATA board is also selecting an Advisory Committee comprised of the elderly and handicappers.

"The committee will oversee and comment on the development of plans for elderly and handicapper services," Leonard said.

CATA is responsible for devising an access plan for maximizing efficiency of the buses, Leonard said.

Any plan coming from CATA offices would then come under scrutiny of the Advisory Committee which is required by state law of the recently passed transportation act.

CATA officials have also included in their federal and state grant applications fund requests for the purchase of 18 new buses equipped with wheelchair lifts to be integrated into the current system.

Student sketch exhibition

Get out your pencils and pads and jot off a note to remember to see the "Pens, Pencils and Pads" exhibit going on now through April 27 at the MSU Museum.

The exhibit will feature sketches by winter term students in Studio Art 141 of objects and things of interest within the museum.

The MSU Museum is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays and 1 to 5 p.m. weekends.

The board also approved contracts totaling $43,000 to provide better ventilation for adequate contaminant control in Holmes Hall basement laboratories.

Work will include alterations to four laboratory hoods and the installation of a new exhaust fan on the roof of the building.

Blood boosting urged

NEW YORK (AP) — Athletes might improve their performance if they got "high" on their own blood rather than turning to vitamins, according to a recent report.

Studies on blood boosting — the removal and subsequent reinfusion of the athlete's blood — can improve exercise time and performance by as much as 40 percent, according to the report in The Physician and Sportsmedicine magazine.

Under the boosting program, a physician removes up to a quart of blood from the athlete. The blood is then frozen in a process that prevents red blood cells from dying. The athlete trains normally until the body has regenerated the blood supply — usually about six weeks — and then the quart of blood is transfused back into the body.

MSU Spartan fans flocked to East Lansing bars and streets to share their hugs, handshakes and cheers after the Spartans won the NCAA championship Monday night.

CETA funds questioned by Lansing City Council

Lansing city councilmembers want everything out in the open concerning Comprehensive Employment and Training Act funds.

Mayor Gerald W. Graves has been accused by councilmember Richard J. Baker of "impounding" CETA funds in past weeks. Because no funds have surfaced, people who qualify for the jobs generated by the money have been denied work, Baker said.

Monday night at the regular City Council meeting, councilmembers unanimously approved established policies and priorities for use of the funds.

The resolution mandates that all available funds be put to use. The council is also asking to examine documents which would tell the amount of funds the council and city have at their disposal.

In other action Monday night, the council referred to committee the rezoning requests made by Health Central, a medical cooperative at 2316 S. Cedar St., Lansing. The requests would change four residential districts into parking lots, which Health Central officials say are desperately needed in order to expand their services.

But the South Central Neighborhood Organization blocked action by the council Monday when its representatives demanded that Health Central study the problems of the facility more closely.

Arts and Letters dean named

Alan M. Hollingsworth, chairperson of the MSU Department of English, will become dean of the College of Arts and Letters effective Sept. 1.

Hollingsworth will succeed Richard E. Sullivan, who plans to return to full-time teaching and research in the history department after nine years as dean of the college.

The Search and Selection Committee for the dean's position was chaired by E. Fred Carlisle, professor of English. Faculty members in the College of Arts and Letters and the departments of American Thought and Language and Humanities were eligible to vote for the new dean.

About 80 percent of the eligible faculty voted and 338 ballots were cast.

Hollingsworth did not receive the most total votes but won the most votes under the first preference tabulation. The vote was tabulated in order of preference for each of the four candidates.

Hollingsworth received 118 first preference votes and 875 total votes. James H.

Pickering, director of the Honors College, received 944 total votes but only 113 first preference votes.

Other candidates for the position were Henry Silverman, chairperson of the Department of American Thought and Language and Conrad Donakowski, professor of Humanities.

Hollingsworth said his main responsibility will be to "bring the value of liberal arts to a generation of students who are concerned about careers."

He expects the college enrollment to triple or quadruple because the University College departments have been disbanded to other areas of the University. The American Thought and Language and Humanities departments will begin an incorporation process into the College of Arts and Letters this fall.

Hollingsworth taught at Indiana University before coming to MSU in 1967 as professor and English department chairperson.

He served as president of the Midwest Modern Language Association and a board and research prize committee member for the National Council of Teachers of English.

Hollingsworth earned his bachelors, masters and doctoral degrees from the University of California at Berkeley.

'Hardcore': Paul Schrader's roots, Grand Rapids style

By BILL HOLDSHIP
State News Reviewer

"We are a sex-oriented culture. Everything is merchandized through sex. Fifty years ago the hooker had to justify herself to the bourgeoisie; now the bourgeois has to justify himself to the hooker and her world."
Paul Schrader

No country is more sexually confused or frustrated than the good old United States of America. Of course, it could be argued that human beings in general are sexual misfits when compared to other creatures, but America's Puritan roots have made this country a very special example of screwed-up sexual neurotics and deviants.

This appears to be the basic premise behind director-writer Paul Schrader's latest film, Hardcore. Though the symbolic pilgrim character of Jake Van Dorn (George C. Scott), Schrader takes the viewer on a modern morality odyssey from the rigid Calvinist social order of Grand Rapids, Mich., to the seedy depraved sex districts of the West Coast. The opposing locales depict America's sexual problems from a plausible cause-and-effect angle, and both are perfect symbols of a "hardcore" mentality from opposite ends of the morality spectrum.

Hardcore deals with Van Dorn's search for his Patty Hearst look-alike teenage daughter, Kristen (Ilah Davis), who disappears during a Youth Calvinist Convention in Los Angeles. Disillusioned by the ineffectual police, Van Dorn hires an extremely horny private detective named Andy Mast (Peter Boyle) to find the girl. After a month, Mast uncovers an eight millimeter porno film featuring Kristen which he unfeelingly shows to her heartbroken father.

Disgusted by the detective's "filthy" antics, Van Dorn fires him and continues the search alone. He is aided by a friendly hooker named Niki (Season Hubley), and the hunt takes the couple from Los Angeles to San Diego and San Francisco. Anyone who has seen Taxi Driver and Blue Collar knows that accuracy and realism are two of Schrader's high points, and this is once again the case as the director takes the viewer into sex shops complete with dildoes and Emotion Lotion, to the House Of Bondage where an S&M session can be purchased with Visa and Master Charge, and finally to the ultimate depravity — snuff films where sexual partners are murdered following intercourse.

This realism is also evident in Schrader's portrayal of Grand Rapids and the Calvinists. The director knows both on a personal level as a Grand Rapids native and a former Calvin College student. In fact, many critics have seen Hardcore as symbolic of Schrader's own experience and moral ambivalence. The Grand Rapids side is given the more sympathetic treatment, but this is understandable, especially in light of a recent interview where Schrader said: "He (Van Dorn) is my father, and I love the idea of making my father into a tour guide of sex-oriented America."

An agonized Jake Van Dorn (George C. Scott) breaks down as he views his daughter on the porno screen in Paul Schrader's Hardcore.

As a result, however, Schrader has been accused of offering no middle ground in the film.

ELVIS!

But more importantly, I believe that Schrader does offer a hint of the aforementioned middle ground during the film's final moments. When Van Dorn is reunited with his daughter, she tells him that he never

Like Taxi Driver, Hardcore makes little distinction between the "good" and "bad." What remains are the victims. From a sexual vein, this is best illustrated when Niki tells Van Dorn that they are alike. "You think sex is so unimportant, you don't do it," she says. "I think sex is so unimportant, I don't care who I do it with."

The choice seems to be between the aged belief of Van Dorn or the decadence of the smut industry, and that really isn't a choice. But while Van Dorn is sympathetic, he can't be viewed as the "good guy," just as the label didn't apply to Robert De Niro's existential hero in Taxi Driver. Like that film, Hardcore makes little distinction between the "good" and "bad." What remains are the victims. From a sexual vein, this is best illustrated when Niki tells Van Dorn that they are alike. "You think sex is so unimportant, you don't do it," she says. "I think sex is so unimportant, I do it with anyone."

Hardcore definitely has its flaws. It isn't another Taxi Driver, and perhaps that film fared better due to Martin Scorsese's skilled direction. The film often loses focus, and each character is nothing more than a surface portrait. But in Schrader's own words, the film is a modern "morality play." As such, the characters might be viewed as modern allegorical figures.

I wish Schrader would have dug deeper and provided a more concentrated point of view, but I still think the film is worthwhile and undeserving of the negative press it has received. It's worthwhile if only for the brilliant performances of George C. Scott and Season Hubley, the latter of whom TV audiences may remember as Priscilla Presley in the recent really cared about her. The broken man weepingly replies that he did and does. "I just never knew how to show it," he cries. And that one line fully reveals just how pathetic and tragic the "hardcore" of both extremes really is.

BoarsHead works magic in 'Vanya'

By ROSANNE SINGER
State News Reviewer

Chekhov had little tolerance for the petty, lethargic lives of many Russian bourgeoisie at the turn of the century. His mockery is particularly evident in Uncle Vanya, a play peopled by bored, directionless dreamers. The BoarsHead Theatre's production of the drama captures the quality of suffocation and boredom while retaining sharpness and a sense of movement. Both the play's humor and sadness come across, with the transitions in mood occurring smoothly.

John Peakes portrays Vanya, a 47-year-old man who drinks because, "It helps me forget I'm not alive." Vanya has changed in the past year from a man who used to be an inspiration to those around him to one who has lost the will to live. Peakes expresses the character's despair that questions, "How will I fill up the hours?" and also Vanya's sense of humor and irony. He is believable as he humbles himself before Elena, the woman he has always loved. However, at one point he kisses her hand — and when snubbed by her, looks rebuffed much as a reprimanded child might, which diminishes the whole moment. Peakes presents a physical and emotional portrayal of Vanya's mocking humor and world-weariness.

Nan Burling captures the exquisite ennui of Elena, the beautiful woman married to an elderly, cantankerous professor. Her every gesture speaks boredom with her existence. At one moment Elena looks out of a window and wonders, "It's already September; how will we live through the winter here?" Burling conveys the character's conflicting desire to welcome Dr. Astrov's advances and to reject him for form and habit's sake.

Herbert Ferrer lacks conviction as the country doctor, Astrov, and plays the character as too much the buffoon. Ferrer speaks of his despair and the fact that it's been years since he has loved anyone. However, the unhappiness seems superficial. Elena remarks that Astrov has a tired, sad face and that his voice is so tender, but Ferrer conveys little of this. The comment that Astrov is touched with genius sounds jarring because Ferrer emphasizes the doctor's comic qualities without suggesting enough seriousness.

Laurel Merlington Schirner touchingly portrays Vanya's niece, Sonya, and provides a good contrast in manner to the poised, cool Elena. She displays all the uncertainty, nervousness and unaccustomed joy of a young woman who has fallen in love for the first time. Schirner also conveys the character's instinct to survive and acceptance of whatever hardship presents itself.

Richard Thomsen is more convincing during Serebryakov's moments as a bed-ridden invalid. He is unpleasantly pompous, demanding and crotchety but also pitiful as he says dispassionately, "If I utter a syllable I disgust everyone... I want life too." However, once the professor somewhat recovers his health Thomsen loses touch with the aged quality and precarious health of the character. Physically he becomes too adept and sharp.

Thomsen has directed Uncle Vanya carefully and with attention to each action. All unspoken tensions and feelings that exist between characters are elegantly expressed through the direction. A particularly strong scene visually is the one that follows Astrov's departure when Sonya realizes the doctor does not love her, Elena is trembling after her confrontation with Astrov and Vanya is recovering from having witnessed Elena and Astrov in an embrace.

Uncle Vanya continues through Sunday at the BoarsHead Theatre at the Center for the Arts on Grand River. Curtain time Thursday, Friday and Sunday is at 8 p.m. and showtimes Saturday are at 6 and 9 p.m. This is the final week of Uncle Vanya.

Nan Burling and Herb Ferrer in the BoarsHead Theatre's production of Uncle Vanya, which will run through the end of the week.

Costello creams the Motor City

By JOHN NEILSON
State News Reviewer

Mick Jones of the Clash once said that all rock 'n' roll is played in enemy territory. As the political pendulum continues on its inexorable swing to the right, the truth in this statement will only become more obvious. In the meantime, we can be thankful for rockers like Elvis Costello Costello has pledged to "do anything to confuse the enemy," and in his recent Detroit appearance he showed that this was no hollow boast.

The concert also proved that Elvis has finally arrived as a major star — or anti-star, to be more exact. Armed Forces is currently high in the charts and well within shooting distance of becoming platinum, several songs from the album are breaking through the once-invincible radio stranglehold, and Linda Ronstadt's version of "Alison" has made FM fans think twice about classifying Costello with "that punk rock $#!%&!" Elvis is no longer an underdog, but the best thing about his success is that it has been achieved without sacrificing an ounce of the venom and anger that propelled him there in the first place. He did it — and is still doing it — his way.

"Please don't ask me to apologize/I won't ask you to forgive me/I'm gonna go down... You're gonna come with me!" The show began with this challenge from "Hand in Hand," and it wasn't hard to see that these words were meant for all of us. From then until the last notes of "You Belong To Me" (get it?) faded away a little over an hour later, the Detroit audience was completely at the mercy of the former computer programmer from Liverpool.

Unlike Bruce Springsteen, whose three-hour shows build and build until the audience lets go with wave after wave of rock 'n' roll frenzy, Elvis Costello puts on a show that is pure blitzkrieg pop. He starts in high gear and — with the exception of "Alison" — stays that way until the audience's demands for an encore prompts him to shift into overdrive. And then he's gone, a hit-and-run guerrilla in the night. His fans are left at the peak of their Beat-induced fever, and the enemy never knows he's been there.

State News, Bill Holdship
Elvis Costello — shown here on stage at last year's Royal Oak show — stormed Detroit again over break. This year's hero played material from his three albums to an ecstatic audience, backed by his band, the Attractions.

Costello's Detroit show was a cross-section of the material from his three albums, plus an identified new number that shows that Elvis' songwriting talents are as sharp as ever. As always, his targets are fascism (on both the international and interpersonal levels), paranoia, and the "automatic" side of modern life, and as always, his lyrical aim is true.

However, in keeping with his stated intentions, Costello has couched his barbs and arrows in some of the best melodic pop-rock around. Like sugar-coating on the medicine, he knows that the catchiness of his tunes will keep his words in our head long after he's played and gone.

In concert, drummer Pete Thomas and bassist Bruce Thomas lay down an irresistible beat, leaving organist Steve Naive to handle most of the melody. Naive's keyboards were excellent throughout, embellishing the recorded versions of almost every tune and throwing in some tasteful solos on songs like "What's So Funny About) Peace, Love, and Understanding?" which benefited from an extended instrumental work-out. "Green Shirt" was also re-worked on stage, making it 100 percent better than the ally titled "You Belong To Me." We were left a dazed crowd of happy "moderns," and Elvis was our stranger once again. While ticket difficulties made this reviewer miss the bulk of the opening set by the Rubi-ready-excellent original. The song is this year's "This Year's Girl," having replaced the scorn of the latter with an edge of paranoia. Costello fears that his black-and-white television picture may hide the fact that the model's clothes are military green — fascism in the guise of high fashion. She teases and she flirts, safe in the knowledge that the public is oblivious to her uniform.

As good as the performances of songs from Armed Forces were, the shows' highlights were from This Year's Model. "The Beat" in concert far eclipses the original, especially when Costello and Naive engage in some remarkable organ/guitar interplay mid-song. "Lipstick Vogue," too, stands out on stage, its menace unleashed and riding a driving drum rhythm. The song's center section was performed in total darkness until a single red spot picked out Elvis — vulnerable and feeling "just like a human being."

The show ended with a throbbing "Pump It Up" and Elvis exhorting the audience to do just that — "Pump it up, Up, UP, as in STANDING!" Then he was gone, the house lights were up, and the crowd was screaming for more. Costello and the Attractions complied with a version of "Radio, Radio" that was dedicated to those who had tried so hard to keep that song and others off the airwaves, and the appropriatenoos, what I did see far surpassed my expectations. The band delivered tight, crafty pop tunes with teenaged exuberance, while joking with the audience about Detroit's well-known love of mindless heavy metal ("isn't Ted Nugent from around here?") They then launched into "Rock 'n Roll Is Dead (And We Don't Care!)," and their encore was an amazing high-energy guitar version of the Seeds' "Pushin' Too Hard." It was all in good fun, and the fact that I remember their set at all after Elvis Costello's superb show says a lot in their favor.

New film brings gang violence

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Boulevard Nights, another movie about brutal street gangs, has been blamed for violence that has left 10 persons injured in shootings and stabbings and forced theaters to hire armed guards to protect their patrons.

Though a box-office hit, it also has sent some theater managers scurrying to lawyers to cancel contracts for the film.

It all sounds like a rerun of the events surrounding the showing of another film of the same genre, The Warriors, which allegedly incited two gang-related shootings that resulted in at least two deaths a few weeks back.

And a third street gang film, Walk Proud, will be released in May.

The mayor of San Francisco, Dianne Feinstein, has personally asked that a theater in that city stop showing Boulevard Nights. She also is seeking legal means to halt screenings of all films that could incite gang violence.

Warner Bros. Studios, "extraordinarily happy" at the box office success of Boulevard Nights, disclaims any blame for the violence but it is helping theaters hire armed guards.

The movie, about Mexican-American gangs in East Los Angeles, opened Friday at 103 theaters in California, the Southwest and New York City. In its first three days, it earned $832,384, said Warner Bros. spokesman Bill Stern.

"We're extraordinarily happy," Stern said. "The film earned approximately $6,500 per day at each theater, which in the industry is considered extremely strong."

Although the studio disclaims responsibility for violence, Warner Bros. has agreed to pick up the tab for theaters to hire armed guards to protect moviegoers.

In addition, the studio did not resist when theater managers in San Francisco and Montclair, a Los Angeles suburb, canceled their contracts for the film.

The most serious violence occurred in San Francisco, where a clash between Mexican-American and Chinese gangs left four persons shot and one stabbed on Saturday.

In Southern California, one youth was shot and two were stabbed at a Montclair drive-in on the film's opening night, and two youths were stabbed at a San Juan Capistrano drive-in in what police said was a clash between two rival gangs.

The violence surrounding Boulevard Nights comes only a month after Paramount's film about New York street gangs, The Warriors, was blamed for touching off a rash of incidents in which two Southern California youths were killed and New York City subway riders were assaulted by a gang of youths who had just seen the film.

Paramount said The Warriors — which some film critics praised as a work of art — earned $4.7 million in its first six weeks.

A third gang movie, Walk Proud, is due to be released in May by Universal Studios and a spokesman said the producer is planning no special precautions because of the violence.

Universal spokesman Frank Wright said the studio considers its PG-rated film a love story with gang activity submerged in the background, not in the same category as The Warriors or Boulevard Nights.

Spartans shoot to kill, and Bird falls victim

the contest. He is also a wizard with the ball when it comes to passing. But against the Spartans, "I kept thinking every shot the Bird took would go in," Heathcote said. "Bird did not have a good night."

What Bird did have was a disappointing and frustrating night as the green and white defense swarmed over him the entire game.

"We thought we'd keep a man-and-a-half on Bird," Heathcote continued. "When he put the ball on the floor we'd put a guard and a forward on him."

"I think the defense worked well tonight but it's worked just as well other nights."

Bird hit only seven of the 21 shots he took from the floor and five of eight free throws to finish with 19 points. He also picked up only two assists.

The main difference in the game, in the eyes of ISU's first-year coach Bill Hodges, was the inability of the Sycamores to hit their free throws. They made only 10 of 22 from the line, four of 11 in the second half.

"I think they're a great team," Hodges said. "We've got a great team also. If we'd hit our free throws we'd been in the game."

"We hadn't been down by 16 before (the Spartans' biggest lead of the game was 16 when Donnelly hit a 18-foot jumper from the corner to increase MSU's lead to 50-34 with 14:53 left in the game) and we wouldn't have been down by 16 if we would have hit our free throws."

ISU chipped away at that lead and got as close as six at 52-46. What could have finally broken the backs of the Sycamores was a four-point play by Magic to raise the score to 61-50 with 5:06 left to play.

Johnson broke through the middle and took a pass from Kelser and jammed it home. ISU's Bob Heaton was called for a two-shot undercutter foul, one of two such called against the Sycamores in the game, and the Magic Man hit both throws.

"I don't believe in breaking points," Hodges said. "But it broke my heart."

From there the Spartans held on for the win, their fifth in the tournament following a regular season-ending 83-81 loss to University of Wisconsin.

The last basket of the game in the final seconds as Kelser broke loose and wrapped up his college career with one of his every popular soaring dunks and then grabbed a firm hold on the rim — the same rim he cut the net off minutes later.

"It's a dream come true," Kelser said. "We set our goal to be the national champions in Brazil (in September). We set our goals high."

Heathcote was obviously elated after the game, but he was also an exhausted coach.

"It was a long season. We've had 39 games," he said. The Spartans played six games in Brazil, one against the Russians and 32 counting the regular season and tournament games. He has said that if he could do it over again, he wouldn't take his team to Brazil.

The Spartans seemed to tire of basketball around Christmas and hit a slump in January that almost killed the season. The Spartans were 4-4 in the Big Ten, four games behind Ohio State University, but a complete overhaul of the team turned things around and MSU went on to win 10 straight before that heart-breaker in Madison, Wis. and to earn a share of the Big Ten title with Purdue and Iowa.

Since that fourth loss in the Big Ten, an embarrassing 83-65 shocker at Northwestern, the Spartans didn't lose a game that they had to win.

Pressure has followed MSU for the last two months and Heathcote said he was glad to see it come to an end.

"Someone asked me my feelings and I said that it was a combination of relief and elation," he said. "The players made an unbelievable comeback and saved their best play for the tournament."

The game may have been the last for both of MSU's superstars in Spartan uniforms. Kel-ser's collegiate career is now history, and Johnson's is still undetermined.

When asked whether he'd be back for his junior season next year, Magic said: "I don't know. I'm going to enjoy this first. I've got a couple of weeks (before he has to decide whether or not he'll declare hardship and become eligible for the National Basketball Association draft). I've got a long time."

He wants to enjoy the national title, and also the title of Most Valuable Player of the Final Four. Kelser and Johnson, along with Bird and DePaul's Mark Aguirre and Gary Garland, were named to the All-Tournament Team.

When the game was just about history, Kelser and Johnson got one last chance to say goodbye on the court.

"I just stopped him, looked him in the eyes and told him he played a great game..." Magic said. "He told me I was a bad dude."

A bad dude on the best college basketball team in the country.

Trustees' motion allows Utah trip

The trustees agreed with Stack's suggestion to send a letter to the NCAA to call attention to the fact that it could influence states that have not ratified the ERA.

"Michigan State alone might not have much effect," Stack said, "but we can call significant attention to the boycott and hopefully it would be a snowball thing."

Stack urged the trustees to maintain the boycott, saying their attendance at the game would neutralize the resolution.

"Unless we maintain the boycott, it is a meaningless resolution in the first place," he said.

Stack finally voted for the resolution when Lick said the trustees could serve a purpose for the University by going.

"But I expect all of you guys to be out on the floor during halftime carrying ERA banners," he joked.

Raymond Krolkowski, D-Birmingham, said the intent of the resolution was not violated at all because the trustees had no way of knowing the Spartans would make it to the finals and that the finals would be held in Utah.

"Those games are scheduled five years in advance," he said. "In order to take that into account, the resolution would have needed a retroactive clause spelling out situations like this."

Barb Sawyer, D-Menominee, was still wrestling with her decision to attend the tournament after Friday's meeting, she said.

"I can't express how proud I am of the team," she continued, "but we're also trying to change an attitude, in terms of changing the NCAA."

Michael Smydra, D-East Lansing, was not present to vote on the rescinding motion. The chairperson of the audit committee said Friday he was unsure if he would attend the game because his daughter was ill. Smydra did go to Utah but could not be reached for comment about the trip.

Martin's similar rescinding motion to attend the Association of Governing Boards convention in Miami, Fla., met with some skepticism from fellow trustees.

Martin said he felt he had been able to learn a great deal from AGB meetings in the past, including affirmative action information.

However, other trustees pointed out that while NCAA had not determined their stance on holding meetings in unratified states, AGB had refused to take the matter into consideration when choosing sites for meetings.

Lick said Tuesday she could only attend one NCAA meeting Friday night because she had to return to Michigan Sunday.

She said the meeting was "very beneficial" because she made many personal contacts for future use in Title IX problems.

Lick said she and Sawyer were the only two trustees who attended the meeting. The other five, she said, attended "alumni meetings" or social gatherings that night.

Victory spells madness for E. Lansing fans

television celebrity status and won the affection of many fans for his mishap with an untied sneaker during the Notre Dame game earlier this month, said "it is a memorable experience for me — the coaches have been great, the players have been great, just everything's been great."

Monday madness

It was like Mardi Gras and a New Year's Eve in Times Square rolled into one.

Within five minutes after the MSU Spartans won its first NCAA basketball title, East Lansing was turned into a festive site not unlike the streets of New Orleans during the "Fat Tuesday" celebration.

And it was as if the magic lighted ball atop the Allied Chemical Tower in New York had come down at midnight to announce not a new year, but a new era for MSU and sports.

Ebullient fans streamed out of bars along Grand River Avenue and into the city's streets. After only a few seconds, honking cars screamed to a halt while Apache war cries and cheers of "WERE NUMBER ONE!" drowned out the chorus of horns from the happy motorists.

Few cared about being stopped. Most halted willingly so half-intoxicated fans could sprawl on a car's hood for a free ride to the west end of Grand River where the mayhem proliferated.

Chairs were hauled out of the Peanut Barrel Restaurant, where a capacity crowd of some 200 had viewed the game on a wide-screen television. The chairs were gathered in the median of Grand River Avenue and ignited into a small bonfire. Roman candles sparked over east campus, while M-80s and ordinary, run-of-the-mill firecrackers popped from within the throng occupying the street.

At Abbott Road entrance to the University, it was more of the same — a lot more. Traffic backed up Homer Street in Lansing, which borders Frandor, to the east, cars sat idle to Hagadorn Road and beyond. All roads leading in to East Lansing were immobilized. Michigan Avenue westbound to Lansing was empty.

Inside Dooley's, manager Bob Merando estimated some 700 boisterous fans packed that popular East Lansing watering hole to watch the game. Patrons in the upstairs part of the bar were nose to nose, pushing to find empty space. The scene was best described as the proverbial sardine can.

Beer and liquor flowed freely as a seemingly under-staffed bar crew scurried around drawing drafts, pouring shots of liquor and clearing off tables cluttered with frothy mugs. Waitress Monica McMillan, loading a gray plastic tub full of glasses, said having to work didn't dampen her spirits.

"I'm so happy for everyone — I just wish I could join them," she shouted above the noise.

Jubilant and obviously intoxicated fans danced jigs on table-tops and without much trouble engaged the crowd in a "Go White/Go Green" shout down. The only loser throughout the raucous celebration was someone's hearing.

And there was a bit of irony thrown into celebration.

Standing in front of a color television and holding a half-full mug of beer, one Arab student stared listlessly at the screen showing jubilant Israelis dancing in the streets of Jerusalem to celebrate the signing of the historic Mideast peace treaty. No one else in Dooley's was watching the screen.

Dooley's reported more than $1,000 damage resulting from broken glass and vandalism to its ornate outside wooden sign. Other East Lansing business and bars reported broken glass-ware and windows.

East Lansing police were concerned only with seeing that the festivities did not erupt into a riot.

"We're just trying to keep things cool," an officer said, then followed that with praise for the Spartan basketball team.

Rolls of white toilet paper flew through the air like streamers, landing over tree branches in front of Campbell

Hall.

A fan decked out in a wolfman mask and a Spartan-flag cape shinnied up a light post as the hundreds of yelling MSU supporters tossed empty beer cans and cheers his way.

In the middle of the pack at the Abbott Road-Grand River Avenue intersection, Fred Jones, past ASMSU presidential candidate and current member of the Programming Board, was seen hawking MSU #1 NCAA Champs T-shirts for $5 a crack.

Jones said ASMSU approved the T-shirt selling plan earlier Monday and that the shirts were printed up during game half-time.

While beer and other potables flowed freely inside East Lansing bars, they were perhaps flowing even more liberally in the streets.

Almost every party store owner was happy with the high volume beer and wine sales. Many stayed open later than usual.

"We stayed open late 'cause there would have been a riot if we tried to close at midnight," a Campus Corners II employee said Tuesday.

At the 7-11 store on the corner of Grove and Albert streets, chaos erupted when thirsty fans poured into the carry-out store and began looting beer and wine after tiring of waiting in check-out lines.

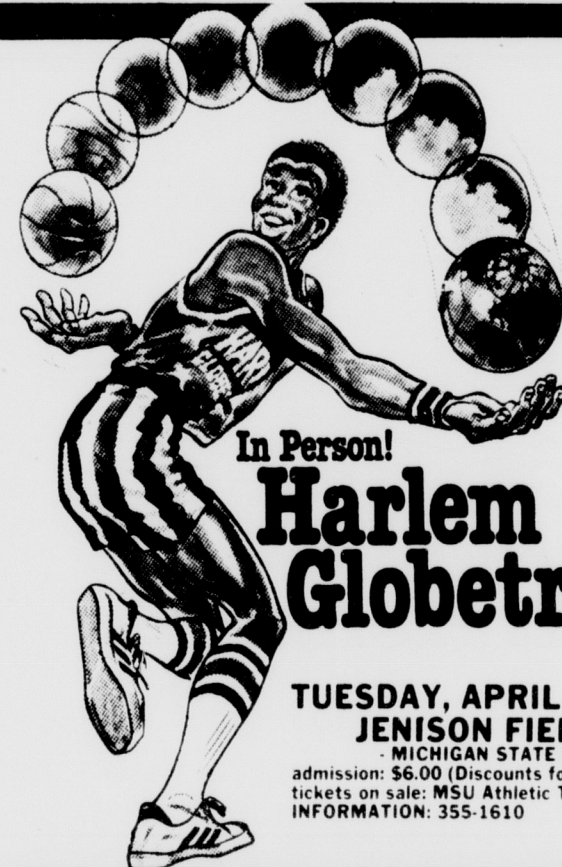

As quickly as employees could shuffle beer into the coolers, customers snatched it up and either fled out the door or drank the beer in the store. Clerks were so busy with the long lines that they did not immediately notice the pilferage.

East Lansing police arrived later and helped the management close the store. A 7-11 store official would not comment on the Monday night incidents.

Most celebrants either forgot about Michigan's deposit law or didn't care about saving the cans and bottles. One man, toting a brown paper shopping bag, said he expected to make about $20 Monday night collecting bottles and undented cans.

East Lansing city clean-up crews were on the streets early Tuesday morning, said public service superintendent David Ronk.

Blame recession for reversal of gains by blacks

By THERESA D. McLELLAN
State News Staff Writer

Blacks and other minorities have to become involved in the political wheel if they want to turn the current trend of regressive policies around, said Georgia State Sen. Julian Bond at the Third Annual Minority Leadership Conference.

Bond was the keynote speaker at the March 17 to 18 conference in Mount Pleasant.

"After the movement of the '60s, there was a removal of the more blatant forms of racism and this has made blacks complacent," Bond said.

Bond said a move to roll back the gains made by minorities has been made recently because of the recession and lack of voter participation among minorities.

"The Bakke lawsuit, for example," he said, "has turned the Constitution around so it has become a protectorate of the quota system."

"Only the male and pale will have monopoly of the good jobs and power and prestige has certified the imaginary reverse discrimination," he explained.

Bond also said California's Proposition 13 is "social arson at the grass roots."

"This is becoming a battle between the 'haves' and the 'have nots,'" he said. "And the 'have nots' hard-won gains after 200 years of struggle are being rolled back."

Bond explained there is a need for an economy that provides for everyone instead of one which relegates blacks to permanent poverty.

Mingling his message with a few jokes, Bond told the audience they have to conquer through their brains, their thoughts and a definite plan.

"The plan might involve great physical security, it may be an economic rebirth or it could be just utter annihilation by class or race, but there has to be a plan," he told the hushed audience.

Bond also explained the reality of reverse discrimination.

"In order to realize where you are, you have to realize where you have been," he said giving the audience a history of blacks facing discrimination.

Minority alienation felt at universities

By THERESA D. McLELLAN
State News Staff Writer

MSU is not alone in its problems of declining minority enrollment and feelings of alienation by minority students, according to students and faculty at a minority recruitment workshop held recently in Mount Pleasant.

The workshop was held during the Minority Leadership Conference and was offered to allow students from various universities to offer suggestions for Western Michigan University's minority enrollment problem.

Jesse Jimenez, a WMU administrator and director of the workshop, explained to a small group of mostly MSU students the dilemma that the university was facing.

"The university wants more minority students, but if we go out looking specifically for minority students we will be charged with discrimination against majority students," he said.

However, Jimenez explained whenever university officials go to various high schools in Michigan, only majority students participate.

"Minority students usually just don't come when we recruit at the high schools," he said.

He said the high school counselors do not understand the student's background so the counselor takes it for granted minority students will know how to go about determining their future.

"Most of the majority students come from a background that is familiar with college and the procedures necessary for getting into college," he said.

But minority students that are looking at college are unfamiliar with the financial aid procedures and have no role models to emulate, he said.

He said the fees that are required for entry at WMU can also be confusing for minority students.

"Students are charged a $50 entrance fee for room and board, a $10 fee for exams and an additional $50 enrollment fee which confuses the students," Jimenez said.

"Students pay the first $50 and then are charged another $50 fee and when they don't pay it they arrive to find they are not enrolled," he said.

Jimenez was unable to present figures on how many students were lost because of confusion, but he said it was a problem that was being examined.

He also explained it was hard on him because he was the only minority member in the admissions office.

"I am only one person and I want to recruit harder for minorities, but I have to sleep," he said.

MEA official discusses racial issue

By CARRIE A. THORN
State News Staff Writer

Blacks lose much power to the system by not acquiring knowledge and skills on their own initiative, a Michigan Education Association official said recently.

Charles Williams, director of MEA's Division of Professional Development and Human Rights, was speaking in a political awareness workshop at the Third Annual Minority Leadership Conference.

"It is simply a delusion to say that political awareness is related to anything other than power," Williams said.

He said minorities stand at the "mercy of the people in society who hold the power."

"Society basically continues to be racist. I believe very sincerely that this is a fact," Williams said. "White males are still the custodians of power in our society, especially institutional power."

The fact that very few blacks hold middle positions of institutional power is one of the main problems, Williams said.

"When you're talking about bureaucracy, you're talking about the men in the middle of an institution. This is where the power is maintained," he said. "There are very few of us in these positions."

The media also portrays all blacks as having reached the "pinnacle" of society — middle class, Williams said adding this "mesmerization that everything is well" is another serious problem.

"Schools are more segregated today than they were in the late '50s and '60s," he said.

An on-rush of other issues in recent years, such as Vietnam and women's rights, have served to dilute the importance of racial issues in this country, Williams said.

"Another barrier to civil rights has been a preoccupation on the part of blacks with past glories and not enough attention to present pain and future struggles," he said.

Williams called charges of reverse discrimination "a way of negating the whole notion that this society is, and will be, racist for a long time."

"We must recognize that individuals don't make changes alone — we must form strong and effective coalitions," he said. "We must recognize that power concedes to nothing but superior power."

Williams explained blacks must know what needs to be changed as well as what should take its place. Blacks also must stop competing and start cooperating in their efforts for equality, he said.

"Blacks must become involved, committed and be willing to risk that which is valuable to them as individuals to serve the 'common good,'" he concluded.

Chisholm at WMU

By THERESA D. McLELLAN
State News Staff Writer

Stressing the importance of obtaining power through education, Congress member Shirley Chisholm reiterated the theme of the Third Annual Minority Leadership Conference at Western Michigan University.

"It's not black power or white power that is going to help you, but brain power," Chisholm said.

The conference, sponsored by the Consortium of Ebony Concerns was established to bring attention to the problems faced by minority students in institutions of higher learning and to bring positive role models to potential student leaders, said a conference spokesperson.

Chisholm, a keynote speaker, told the mostly student audience at one session of the weekend conference they have to be prepared for the "racist and competitive society."

"Black people, there is no room for unskilled men and women in this capitalistic system where competition and racism is rampant," she said.

The recession of two years ago has deeply affected programs designed to help minorities, she said, and white legislators are retreating to safer positions on affirmative action, equal employment and integrated institutions.

"These legislators find they have to move to the mood of the country," Chisholm said, "and the country is in the mood of removing programs for minorities and blacks."

In addition to education, Chisholm stressed the need for minorities to gain political power through legislators, as well as ballot representation.

Explaining that blacks in the United States are still grossly under-represented, Chisholm said the blame also has to be placed on minorities themselves.

"Nobody gives you anything," she said. "Unless we participate in voting in large numbers, no politician will give us assistance." Chisholm stressed the need for blacks to become involved in all matters affecting them and urged the students not to become complacent.

"What you are is God's gift to you," she said. "What you make of yourself will be your gift to God."

COMMUNITY SELF-SUFFICIENCY RECOMMENDEDE. L. energy issues examined

By SANDY HOLT
State News Staff Writer
Community self-sufficiency should be encouraged to promote energy conservation, an East Lansing subcommittee decided Monday night.

The Energy Advisory Committee concluded its final examination of energy issues at its meeting Monday. The committee, a subcommittee of East Lansing's Planning Commission, will present energy conservation proposals to the commission.

The Planning Commission will utilize recommendations on energy conservation from the committee in drawing up a new Comprehensive Plan for the city's future growth.

The committee is now revising its final report, which should be completed the first week of April, said Jim van Ravensway, city planner. The report will be presented for public comment in April before being sent to the Planning Commission, he added.

Energy conservation ideas in the areas of housing, commercial, land use, public facilities, transportation and residential have been examined by the committee since its creation in September 1978, said chairperson Brian Matter.

Committee suggestions are not binding on the Planning Commission but will be considered in the final development plan for the city, Matter said.

Community self-sufficiency, an idea designed to keep people from having to drive out of the community to shop, would be fostered by amending building codes to allow "community service commercial districts" to be built in new residential areas.

The commercial districts include dry cleaners and grocery, hardware and drug stores, among other facilities, located in walking or bicycling distance from residential areas.

Efficient land use for conserving energy was also discussed by the committee.

By amending zoning and building codes, the committee would provide for more "high-density housing" or apartments and condominiums instead of single-family dwellings and duplexes.

High-density housing would be encouraged in areas surrounding the city's central business district and along Abbott Road, Lake Lansing Road, Michigan Avenue and Grand River Avenue.

The committee will also suggest the creation of a City Energy Commission to perform energy audits, prepare energy impact statements for city-owned structures and work to reduce consumption of non-renewable energy sources such as oil and natural gas.

The committee continues to emphasize mass transportation, walking and bicycling instead of driving cars and discussed incentives for city employees to use the alternatives.

It also suggested more efficiency in city-owned vehicles by instituting a transportation pool, purchasing vehicles with better gas mileage and starting a preventative maintenance schedule for them.

Former professor dead at 72

Charles H. Pesterfield, retired MSU professor of mechanical engineering, died March 21 at a Lansing hospital. He was 72.

Pesterfield, who taught at MSU for 38 years, retired in 1975. He was a specialist in heat power engineering.

Pesterfield, a native of Van Buren, Ark., came to MSU in 1937 as an instructor, and became a professor in 1948. From 1969 to 1970, he served as assistant director of engineering research and director of the State Technical Service Program.

Pesterfield was a member of Sigma Xi, Tau Beta Pi, the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers and the National and Lansing Engineers Club.

He is survived by his wife Margaret, of East Lansing, two daughters, a son, and seven grandchildren.

Retired prof dies

Byron H. Good, retired professor of animal husbandry and long-time chairperson of Farmer's Week at MSU, died March 21 at his East Lansing home. He was 66.

Good joined the MSU faculty in 1941 after receiving a master's degree in animal husbandry from Ohio State University. He became superintendent of University Farms in 1950 and professor of animal husbandry in 1959.

He was general chairperson of Farmer's Week from 1959 until his retirement in 1978.

Olin offers plan for continued aid

Graduating seniors, as well as students enrolled spring term and planning to return in the fall, are eligible to purchase an $18 Health Service Card under a plan announced March 15 by Olin Health Center.

The card would enable seniors to use Olin Health Center facilities for one term after graduation and students living in the MSU vicinity to use the services in the summer, said Doreen VanderJagt, Olin business manager.

VanderJagt said the option would prevent interruption in health care services for those students who have become accustomed to using University facilities.

"The plan will allow students with a regular doctor here on campus to receive services over the summer or until they relocate," she said.

Health cards for summer term will be available after finals week of spring term in the Olin Health Center Cashier's Office. Valid student identification is required for purchase.

E. L. grant request review set tonight

East Lansing's 1979-82 federal Community Development Block Grant application for $2 million will be reviewed by the Tri-County Regional Planning Commission 7 tonight, 2722 E. Michigan Ave. The largest allocation of the proposed funding, $500,000, would be used to develop a human services facility or facilities in the Spartan Village and Red Cedar areas of the city.

Other major items in the budget are housing rehabilitation for five target areas in the city where there are concentrations of low and moderate-income households and substandard and dilapidated housing.

The first year of the budget application has a proposed funding of $666,000. Grand River Avenue improvements have a proposed funding of $164,000.

The East Lansing City Council approved the application last month. The State Office of Inter-Governmental Relations is reviewing the application.

Tri-County and the state are required by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to review the city application for possible planning conflicts.

Treaty protests stir 'U'

By JENNIFER DIXON
State News Staff Writer

The Middle East peace treaty will not bring peace to the area, said a Muslim student who was one of about 150 people who protested Tuesday against the recently signed treaty.

The demonstration started at the International Center at noon, continued to the Administration Building, Union and the intramural buildings.

"We're not against peace, but we're for a just peace," said a Saudi Arabian student and member of the MSU Muslim Students' Association who asked not to be identified. "The treaty ignored Palestinians' rights."

"The treaty recognizes Israel as a state and ignores Palestine. It also brings more foreign military presence to the Middle East," he said.

The treaty is expected to cost the United States government $5 billion in aid to Egypt and Israel.

He said Muslim students from the Third World countries, which include Saudi Arabia, Iran, Indonesia, Nigeria, India and Pakistan, have a moral obligation to their Muslim brothers in Palestine.

"Israel kicked Palestine out of their land and this is against any human right. It ignores the Palestinians' right to determine their destiny," the student said.

He explained the Gaza Strip, West Bank and Sinai Peninsula were taken from Palestine by the Israelis during the Seven Day War in 1967. They were not part of the state of Israel, which was established when the British gave the Jewish people a homeland in 1948.

These areas were previously Palestinian land, he said. Jerusalem has been a holy place for Muslims, Christians and Jews since the beginning of history, but mainly for Arabs, he added saying Israel did not exist until 30 years ago.

"Jews think that just because Israel is the promised land from God they can kick people from it and take the land because God promised them it," he said.

The protesters said they feel the treaty, signed Monday in Washington D. C., goes against the independence of the Middle East countries. They claimed it interferes with internal affairs and is forcing a negative situation on the people of these countries.

"It's like colonialism in a way," the student said.

"The United States is trying to put military bases there and the countries involved in the signing of the treaty want to use arms against us, the people of the area," he said.

The treaty defies Arab and Muslim wants, he added.

"Egypt is led by bad leadership," he said. "I'm sure most Egyptians don't agree with the treaty, but they are forbidden to protest."

"We think the United States should not intervene and let people decide for themselves," he said.

Police seek cause of man's injuries

Area police are still trying to reconstruct a March 18 incident near the Coral Gables, 2838 East Grand River Ave., which left a St. Johns man near death.

Meridian Township Police found David Eric Whittaker, 23, of 4010 South Watson Ave. in the parking lot next to Coral Gables at 2:23 a.m., bleeding profusely from the ears. Whittaker is listed in critical condition at Edward W. Sparrow Hospital.

Whittaker suffered a skull fracture and other bruises, but how the injuries were inflicted is unknown, Meridian Township Police Sgt. William Shelton said.

Coral Gables bouncers saw Whittaker drinking in Coral Gables and saw him leave about 1:45 a.m., Shelton said. Medical examiners said Whittaker may have been struck by a car, fallen off a car or was struck in some other manner, Shelton said.

Whittaker was not robbed and no confrontation has been reported, Shelton said.

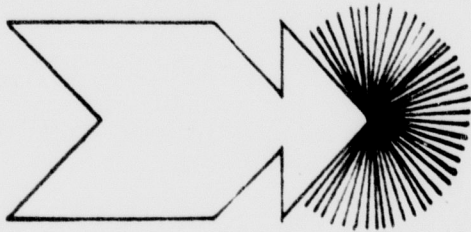

It is unknown how Whittaker got to Coral Gables as his car was still in St. Johns and his parents did not know he was gone.

Persons with information about the incident are asked to contact Meridian Township Police Detective Sgt. Bob Nelson.

Journalism school chairperson quits

George A. Hough III, chairperson of the School of Journalism, has resigned from the school effective Aug. 31 to take a similar position at the University of Georgia.

Hough will become head of the news editorial sequence at the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism and Mass Communications, dividing his time between administrative duties, teaching and research activities, he said.

Hough began teaching at MSU in 1957. He received both his masters degree in Communications in 1958 and his doctoral degree in English in 1965 from MSU.

The journalism school will probably set up a selection committee to find a new chairperson, Hough said.

Mail to Iran opens again after delays

Mail service to Iran resumed March 15, after it was suspended Jan. 9, at the request of the Iranian government. However, surface mail service to Vietnam has been delayed and rerouted through Germany. But airmail service to that country is continuing on schedule after being rerouted through Thailand, due to the recent China-Vietnam border dash.

Previously, mail for Vietnam was sent to Hong Kong and shipped through China. Since the border was closed by the present conflict, regular routing of mail has not been possible.

"Even though the war stopped, there have been some problems and we haven't been able to resume normal routing of mail," said Lou Eberhardt, headquarters spokesperson for the U.S. Post Office in Washington, D.C.

A strike by Jamaican postal workers also forced the U. S. Post Office to hold mail for Jamaica from March 8 through 16.

Returned mail for Iran, for which no postage has been refunded, can be re-entered in the mails at no cost, but senders should cross off the endorsement "Postal Service temporarily suspended."

How to paint Easter eggs

Blame recession for reversal of gains by blacks

Bond explained the irony of the desegregation law at Little Rock, Ark. which would force the school to integrate blacks and the current desegregation rulings in Savannah, Ga. which some minorities are urging will affect minority enrollment.

The Georgia ruling approved by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has been condemned by blacks who view this as an attempt to dissolve traditional black institutions in the south.

The ruling would exchange programs with another school and this exchange is viewed as a threat to enrollment for blacks.

Bond also voiced his concern about a recent poll which indicated blacks are not aware of their heritage or current minority issues.

He also expressed dismay at the lack of political awareness among young blacks. Comparing President Carter and a fictitious Black man the same age, Bond traced their lifestyles and opportunities from childhood to present showing the economic and social inequities faced by blacks.

Minority alienation felt at universities

Students at the workshop offered suggestions which included recruiting students at earlier high school levels, such as the sophomores and juniors. They also questioned the atmosphere for minorities at WMU.

A WMU junior, Bobbi Pou, explained the number of blacks at the university was so small that most blacks felt alienated.

"It's really bad up here and the only together organization that we have is the Greeks," she said.

Pou also said WMU professors do not encourage a positive atmosphere for minority students.

"It's really bad when a professor will look at you and you are the only black person in the class and he tells you he doesn't like blacks," she said.

MSU students asked whether the university has organization in their colleges for minorities such as the students in the MSU College of Engineering offered and Pou responded with a loud, "no."

Pou also expressed concern over the retention rates at WMU.

"The people that came up here with me are no longer here and you can tell when we are losing students," she said.

"There has to be something we can do," she told Jimenez.

LONDON (AP) — Scotland Yard is publishing a book that is a must for every police library in England.

The little black book, entitled "The Handbook of Violent Thieves," devotes one page to each of the nation's top 100 villains.

Frozen body found

The frozen body of a deceased Lansing man was discovered early Tuesday morning in a lot at 1404 N. Larch St., by another Lansing resident on his way to work.

Norman Coleman, 41, of 2338 Rheamont Ave. was pronounced dead at the scene by an Ingham County Medical Examiner. A complete autopsy has not been finished but Lansing Police said they assume Coleman died of natural causes.

Coleman's body had apparently been in the junkyard lot for a few days and was frozen to the ground, police said. This frozen condition is slowing the autopsy process.

Police are investigating.

Geography chair

Gary A. Manson, associate professor of geography, was named chairperson of the department effective April 1 at the March MSU Board of Trustees meeting.

He succeeds Lawrence M. Sommers, who resigned from the position to return to teaching.

Donald E. Gerhardt was also named administrative director of the MSU Clinical Center. He will oversee the $2 million budget and staff of MSU's health care building.

Frederick L. Honhart III, assistant director of Archives and Historical Collections, was named director of the program.

On the way to the finals

By JOE CENTERS
State News Staff Writer

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah — It was like a storybook ending, with MSU and Indiana State fighting their way to the final game of the NCAA basketball championship.

The Magic Man versus the "Bird Man" is how Spartan Coach Jud Heathcote saw it following his team's 101-67 massacre over the University of Pennsylvania Quakers to earn the right to play for the national title.

The Sycamores reached the finals by defeating DePaul, 76-74 in the semifinals to raise their perfect record to 33-0. Indiana, in 1976, was the last team to bring an undefeated record into the final game. The Hoosiers went on to defeat University of Michigan 86-68 for the title and finished the season 32-0.

With MSU and ISU paired in opposite brackets in the tournament, the only way the two teams could have met was in the finals, and both lived up to their end of the deal.

It was a fan's dream to see the two best passers in college basketball, Earvin "Magic" Johnson and Larry Bird, go head-to-head in the title game. With the first half of the Spartans' game against Penn barely over, it was evident that MSU would be in the finals.

"We want the Bird," is what the Spartan fans chanted.

And the Bird was who they got.

Both players put on amazing performances in the semi-finals. Johnson hit 20 of the 22 shots he took in the game (nine of 10 from the floor and 11 of 12 from the free throw line) for 29 points. He also grabbed 10 rebounds, passed off 10 assists and made three steals just for good measure.

Bird was just as spectacular as he scored 35 points, hitting 16 of 19 from the floor and three of four from the charity stripe. Added to that, he cleaned the boards 16 times, dished off 9 assists and made one steal. The one weak spot Bird had in the game — and he seemed very disappointed with the fact — was that he turned the ball over 11 times.

"I just couldn't grip the ball the way I wanted to," Bird said following the game as he took the tape off the broken thumb that had hampered him throughout the whole tournament. "I made a lot of mistakes today I usually don't make."

"If I knew I was going to make 11 turnovers before the beginning of the game, I probably would have thought we were to lose."

The Sycamores didn't lose against the Blue Demons of coach Ray Meyer, who in his 37th year of coaching was making his first appearance in the Final Four and winning the hearts of millions. His team was definitely the sentimental favorite of the tournament, but it took some last-second "magic," if you'll excuse the term, to win the game.

ISU squeaked past Arkansas 73-71 on a last-second shot by Bob Heaton, the team's designated clutch shooter, to win the Midwest regional and make it to the Final Four, and against DePaul, it was Heaton who again came up with the last-second heroics.

The Blue Demons fought back from an 11-point deficit with 16:37 left in the second half and finally took a 73-71 lead with just over four-and-a-half minutes to go in the game, but they tried to hold the ball — an ideal which didn't work.

ISU got the ball back and tied the game on a shot by Heaton, but a freethrow by DePaul's Gary Garland put the Demons back on top, 74-73. The Sycamores worked for a good shot, and that's exactly what they got when Heaton freed himself for an easy lay-up which turned out to be the winning basket. DePaul got one more shot by freshman Mark Aguirre, who was forced to throw up a prayer that wasn't answered.

The Spartans didn't need any last-second luck to win. In fact, MSU won its first four tournament games by a total of 93 points, an unbelievable difference in NCAA play.

The Quakers came out about as flat as the state of Michigan looks next to mountainous Utah and shot only 16.7 percent from the floor in the first half, 29.3 percent overall and that was the story of the game.

There wasn't much of a story and there wasn't much of a game.

Senior forward Gregory Kelsner did his share for the Spartans as he hit from everywhere to finish with 28 points. Mike Brkovich was the only other MSU player in double figures as he popped in 12.

After the game, Johnson was asked if he ever felt sorry about beating a team as badly as they had beaten Penn.

"I feel bad," Magic said, "but hey, it was either them or us — I'm glad it was us."

At a press conference before the game, the Magic man and the Bird were asked about each other and about themselves before they actually met face-to-face.

"I'm a fan of basketball," Johnson said, "and I love watching things that maybe I can do or maybe I can't do."

He was excited about playing the Bird but then again he's always excited about playing.

Bird was asked why Earvin always carried that big grin of his during the games while he always looked so serious.

"Well, he's laughing at his opponents," Bird said. "I just hope he isn't laughing at me."

No one had left before, in fact, most people were saying the Bird looked better in person than he did on television.

How did the Bird react when a reporter brought that up?

"They know what they're talking about," he answered.

Tournament a Donnelly affair

By JOE CENTERS
State News Sports Writer

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah — It was like the calm before the storm. In about an hour, the MSU basketball team would be on the court of the Special Events Center on the campus of the University of Utah to meet Pennsylvania in the semi-finals of the NCAA tournament.

The arena was nearly empty, but the electricity that filled the air was bouncing off the walls. There was a man standing by the tunnel where the Spartans would come out in about half-an-hour and he was just waiting, and waiting, and waiting.

The waiting was tearing him up inside, but just to be standing there was a dream come true for him. His son was playing in the Final Four. For three years, Roger Donnelly, along with his wife Ina, have traveled across the country to watch their son, Terry, play basketball.

This game was special, though, especially for Mr. Donnelly, who could barely even talk. His son was going to play in one of the biggest sporting events that takes place in this country and he was confident the Spartans would win. Did he ever think something like this would happen?

"No, I sure didn't," he said. "Of course this is a dream. Terry and I have thought about since he was a kid."

Back in 1973, Terry and his father sat in the Checkerdome in St. Louis, where the family lives, and watched as Bill Walton led UCLA to its seventh straight NCAA basketball title as the Bruins defeated Memphis State 87-66. That's when the dream really caught fire.

"I took Terry and we talked about some day maybe getting the opportunity to play," Donnelly said. Last year, the Spartans almost made it to the Final Four, but a 52-49 loss to Kentucky in the Midwest regional final ended the Spartans' season just one game shy of making it.

This season there was no stopping MSU from getting to the finals with Indiana State. The Spartans ripped apart their first four opponents in the tournament, including Penn, 101-67, but according to the elder Donnelly, it was the win over Notre Dame in the finals of the Midwest regionals that Terry really wanted.

"Terry always wanted to play Notre Dame," he said. But the way his eyes lit up when he said it, it was obvious he wanted the Irish also.

With St. Louis a good eight hours from East Lansing by car, it is hard for the Donnellys to get to MSU's games and see Terry. According to Mr. Donnelly, though, they have seen about half of the games this season. "Not as many as last year," he said. "But we had snow problems."

Spartans breeze to Final Four

By JOE CENTERS
State News Sports Writer

It was a long road for the MSU basketball team to get to

Salt Lake City, Utah and the Final Four, but the Spartans made it look a lot easier than anyone had expected.

The first stop was in Murfreesboro, Tenn. where MSU coach Jud Heathcote and company took on Lamar University from Texas. The Cardinals won the right to play the Spartans by defeating the University of Detroit 93-85 in a game that resembled a shoot out at the OK Corral.

As the score indicates, it was a one-sided affair — not one-sided toward either team, mind you — a game where everything was offense, as the defense took the day off.

Lamar is a self-admitted offensive team. Coach Billy Tubbs, when asked to describe the defense his team uses, said that it plays a two-two-one defense. Two guys play zone, two play man-to-man and the other guy doesn't know what the hell he is doing.

Against the Spartans, it looked like nobody knew what they were doing on defense as Earvin "Magic" Johnson shredded them to pieces with his passing and led MSU to an easy 95-64 win.

"I told our players to watch him (Johnson) and they did," Tubbs said following the game. "Hell, they're sitting in the lockerroom saying he's a great player."

Lamar described the game as a "good ol' country butt whipping."

"I couldn't tell you what they did," he said. "They did it all. We were out-played, we were out-coached, we were out-everythinged."

Senior forward Gregory Kelsner had a big game as he was able to get inside all day and he tallied a game-high 31 points and added 14 rebounds. The Magic Man did everything in that first game as he scored 13 points, dished off 10 assists and pulled down 17 rebounds.

Mike Brkovich and Ron "Bobo" Charles each chipped in with 12 points and Jay Vincent scored 11 in the 13 minutes of action he saw as he sat out the entire second half with a bruised foot.

Sophomore Jaimie Huffman produced the last bit of excitement for the Spartan fans near the end of the game when he lost his shoe and instantly picked up the nickname "Shoes Huffman" from Al McGuire.

who was announcing the game for NBC.

Following the game, Johnson had some words of wisdom about the rest of the NCAA tournament.

"I think last year we were excited about being here and playing in the NCAA tournament," he said. "This year we are just showing up and doing the job."

And what a job the Spartans did in Indianapolis, Ind. in the Midwest regionals as they demolished the Louisiana State Tigers in the semi-finals 87-71, and then won the right to the Final Four by defeating Notre Dame 80-68 in the championship game.

Against LSU, which was playing without its star forward DeWayne Scales, who was suspended a week earlier by coach Dale Brown, the Spartans got off to a big lead early and coasted the second half to the win.

MSU led 36-19 at the half, the fifth time this season the Spartans had held a team to under 20 points in a half. It was slow going for both teams in the beginning until Kelsner cashed in on back-to-back dunks, giving MSU a 7-5 lead which it never lost.

Four players hit for double figures in the game, led by Magic's 24 points and 12 assists. Charles replaced Vincent, who sat out the whole game with his bruised foot, and responded with 18 points and 14 rebounds. Kelsner scored 15 and pulled down nine rebounds, Brkovich tallied 11 and freshman Ron Gonzalez added nine.

"This was probably the best game of my career," Bobo said. "I was going after the rebounds, that's what we needed the most. The scoring just came."

The slender 6-foot-7, 190-pound junior usually plays away from the basket and isn't used to all of the contact that goes on underneath the boards.

"It was very physical," he said. "They took cheap shots at you. I hate the middle."

Hate it or not, Charles did

MSU students and fans fill the streets of East Lansing early Tuesday morning after the MSU basketball team broke Indiana State's 33-game winning streak, 75-64, to win the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship Monday in Salt Lake City, Utah.

DAVE JANSSEN

MSU fans show they are number one too

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH — At the time this piece was going to press, nothing mattered more to the MSU faithful than the outcome of tonight's NCAA final contest against Indiana State. For several days now, the Salt Lake City Press has been jamming our brains with every conceivable fact and statistic about the fabled Final Four.

Needless to say, in the last couple days, we have all become quite familiar with Indiana State and have been well versed on the matchup between "the Magician" and "the Bird Man."

The papers here have done an excellent job of covering nearly every aspect of the finale of college's No. 1 tournament. Now all there is left to do is to wait and see who will become the nation's No. 1 team.

With this in mind, I would like to take a brief look at an important part of the tournament about which we have only been able to find traces of literature — the fans.

Fans are important in any sports event but their importance seems to increase in proportion to the scope of each contest. The Spartan contingent has struggled along with the team through the hardest of the Spartan times this season and, just like the team, seem to be peaking in the tournament. No matter the outcome of Monday night's game — if there was such a thing, the most Valuable Fans Award would rest firmly in the hands of MSU. Those who watch the games on television might disagree — the Notre Dame fans were tough in Indy, the Indiana State fans were extremely vocal here in Salt Lake. But, believe me, you saw only a small portion of the MSU spirit when the cameras panned the green and white backers.

In Indianapolis, hundreds of MSU fans took over Market Square and engineered a tremendous rally that climaxed with a huge parade through the downtown streets. The green and white wave rolled up to the front of the arena where it performed victory chants until it was time to file inside for the game. A similar, but smaller scale gathering could be witnessed beginning at Hotel Utah Motor Lodge, MSU's Salt Lake City home, and ending at the Temple Square, in the heart of the Downtown Area. Monday's 2 p.m. rally was scheduled to pick up right where it left off Sunday night in Temple Square. Considering the meaning of the championship game, it promised to be the best yet.

The Spartan band that has traveled to the tournament site, along with the cheerleaders, deserve much of the credit for getting the spirit up and keeping it going. Although the Spartan fans were vociferous during their rallies, it would be unfair to say they were obnoxious. One might say, simply, that they were intimidating.

The Indiana State fans were definitely the most stringent of the fan competition the Spartan entourage met with during the NCAA tourney. But the two camps exhibited contrasting styles in supporting their teams. One Spartan fan, Steve Hiller, an MSU junior in Salt Lake City for the tourney explained: "Aside from the rallies and the game, Michigan State people displayed a more subdued brand of confidence while Indiana State fans, through their cockiness, tried to convince themselves that they actually had a chance of winning the final."

This being only my second year at MSU, I can hardly call myself an authority on past MSU sports. However, I have been around Spartan Stadium enough to have felt the pain of some of the inconsistency in losses during the 1974 and 1975 football seasons. I was also around to witness the players walk out at Jenison Fieldhouse in 1975 during the hard times for MSU basketball.

Lets face it — until the emergence of Darryl Rogers and Jud Heathcote, the story of MSU's major sports in recent years has given the fans little to cheer about. With something to get fired up about, the fans are proving that they can be just as spirited and exciting as the teams themselves.

Shortly after the Spartans' tournament opener with Lamar I asked Earvin Johnson what he thought about the MSU fans.

"They're wild and crazy," the Magic Man said. "They're the No. 1 fans in the country — no doubt about it."

Everything is looking well for MSU at this juncture. Led by the resurgences in basketball and football, the athletic program is on the upswing. The wild-and-craziness of the fans, then, may not come as a surprise. Still, the extent and intensity of the wild-and-craziness does.

The question that pops up, then, is will the fans stick with the Spartans if they hit bad times again? Will they stay behind them next year, Earvin or no Earvin? Winning makes life easy for everyone — the players, the coaches and the fans.

I was impressed with the MSU rooters last year in Dayton after they lost to Kentucky. Though that defeat may have been expected, I think the way the fans accepted the big loss was a good sign.

Now all we can do is wait and see what the future holds for the Spartan teams and their fans.

The MSU fans in Indianapolis and Salt Lake City gave me only one regret — that I had passed up the trip to Murfreesboro.

MSU's basketball team rarely had any standoffs, as in this rebound against the Spartan's Gregory Kelsner and Notre Dame's Orlando Woolridge. Jud Heathcote's squad won all of its games in the NCAA tournament by at least 10 points en route to the school's first national basketball championship. MSU was supposed to have its toughest game against the Irish. But the Spartans handled them with ease, 80-68, to win the Midwest regional.

Gymnasts end season

By JEFF MINAHAN
State News Sports Writer

During spring break the MSU men's gymnastics team capped its season by participating in the Big Ten and National Collegiate Athletic Association Midwest Regional meets. The results of these two meets typify the Spartans' entire season, a frustrating mixture of good and bad.

The Spartans traveled to Ann Arbor on March 9 and 10 for the Big Ten meet and came away with a disappointing sixth-place finish.

Although they had been picked to finish no higher than third place and were edged out of fifth by only four-tenths of one point, the results were less than satisfying to coach George Szypula.

"We could have done better. We should have been fifth," he said. "We have a better team than that, we just didn't show it."

In a very close meet, the University of Minnesota, a "super team who should do well nationally" according to Szypula, edged Ohio State University for the team championship by two-tenths of a point.

In third place was University of Michigan, followed in order by Illinois, Iowa, MSU, University of Wisconsin and Indiana, Purdue and Northwestern did not compete.

Marvin Gibbs, outstanding all-arounder for the Spartans all season, himself finished a disappointing fifth place in that event. He finished four-tenths of one point behind fourth place.

Not much else went the Spartans' way in the meet, making it a sad finish to an up-and-down season in the Big Ten. But the story was a different one when they traveled to DeKalb, Ill. for the regional meet.

As a team, the Spartans finished in eighth place, which Szypula said he was quite pleased with.

"We did just as well as we could," he said. "It was the same old bugaboo, depth, which kept us from doing really well."

While Szypula had high praise for many individuals on his team, he could not conceal his excitement over the outstanding performance of Charlie Jenkins.

For the first time in 10 years, a Spartan gymnast has qualified for the nationals in two events. Jenkins is that gymnast.

The junior from LaGrange, Ill. placed fifth on the parallel bars, and third in his specialty, the vault, to qualify for the national meet to be held April 5 through 7 in Baton Rouge, La.

For the third time this year, Jenkins was narrowly edged out on the vault by Kurt Thomas, universally recognized as the best all-around gymnast this country has produced in years.

According to Szypula, Jenkins could have easily won the event had he not stumbled slightly on his landing. Jenkins' vault, a double flip, had the veteran coach of 36 years expressing amazement and praise.

For Marvin Gibbs, the meet was a tough one as he was close in every event, but not quite close enough.

Gibbs finished ninth overall in the all-around, missing the qualifying sixth place by two points.

Szypula agreed that it was tough for Gibbs to come so close and miss, but added that he performed very well, and that Gibbs will definitely be back.

While he was close in every event, Gibbs' biggest heart-break came in the floor exercise. In that event he tied for seventh place with teammate Jenkins. Both gymnasts missed sixth place and a spot in the nationals by three-fourths of one point.

Backup all-arounder Dan Miller had some misfortune of his own. In the warm-ups, Miller twisted his ankle practicing his floor routine. He went on to compete and earned strong praise from Szypula for his efforts.

Other Spartans who did well were senior Paul Hammonds, who finished 12th on the pommel-horse, an outstanding finish considering the difficulty of the pommel-horse.

Charlie Fanta placed well on the parallel bars, and Rich Licata demonstrated that he will be a major factor in Spartan gymnastics in his three remaining years by finishing 12th on the high-bar.

Szypula added that Jeff Warner again provided a good, steady performance like he has all year, helping to steady the Spartans.

"It was a super meet,"

Szypula said. "It was a thrill to be there. We showed very well. I'm pleased with the overall efforts of our team, and I'm thrilled by the efforts of Jenkins and Gibbs."

Gibbs added that next year the Spartans will definitely be tougher, and that the haunting problem of depth should be a problem no more.

SMITH, MOORE MAKE ALL-AMERICAN

Runners place three finalists

By JERRY BRAUDE
State News Sports Writer

MSU's men's track team finished its indoor season on a high note as all three Spartan qualifiers for the National Collegiate Athletic Association meet made it to the finals in their respective races.

Two of the Spartans, distance runner Keith Moore and sprinter Randy Smith took All American honors by finishing in the top six in the final races while Tyrone Williams finished sixth in the 600-yard dash.

In Detroit's Cobo Hall, Moore finished fourth in the finals of the 1,000-yard run with his best career time of 2:09.96. Villanova's Don Paige won the event with a meet-record of 2:07.27.

"Keith reaching All-American was a real honor for both his school and him," distance coach Jim Gibbard said. "I always thought he had the ability to achieve it when he was recruited. But it just took two years for him to mature and do what he was capable of doing."

Smith took All-American honors for the second time in the three years he's been at MSU by placing sixth in the finals of the 60-yard dash with a 6.27 electric time. Curtis Diekey of Texas A & M won the event.

"Randy is a super competitor, and to me, his honor was the epitome of everything he's done," head coach Jim Bibbs said. "I can't say enough about him. He was under tremendous pressure, but he was consistent. I'm glad we'll get him back for another year."

"I was pretty pleased, especially with the conditions I had to run under," Smith said of being bothered by a strained groin and a sore knee. "I just took one race at a time, and just to know you're the sixth best in the nation is a pretty good feeling."

With all three Spartan NCAA finalists returning next year, Bibbs is becoming more optimistic on the squad's future.

"If we now can get some national performances from some of the other people, we can possibly finish in the top 10 in the nation next year," Bibbs said.

Yet, the tracksters still have an outdoor season left to compete in, which begins April 7 at Purdue.

IM Notes

Sports-Circle):

Women's softball is noon, April 5.

Co-rec slowpitch softball is noon, April 4.

Co-rec one pitch softball is noon, April 4.

Men's independent volleyball is noon, April 5, office 121 IM Sports-Circle or office 201 IM Sports-West.

Men's fraternity team racquetball is noon, April 13, office 201 IM Sports-West.

Men's independent bowling is noon, April 6, office 201 IM Sports-West.

The MSU IM sports program is always trying to come up with new ideas. This time they have come up with new names for their IM buildings. Instead of men's and women's buildings, the IM department has thrown sexism out the window, renaming the Women's IM as Intramural-Recreative Sports-Circle and the Men's IM as Intramural-Recreative Sports-West.

But as usual, there are some important and required meetings at the beginning of the term for the sports. These are the following team representatives' meetings:

Women's softball will be held Thursday at 6 p.m. in 137 IM Sports-Circle, or April 3, at 5 p.m. in 137 IM Sports-Circle, or April 4 at 6 p.m. in 137 IM Sports-Circle.

Co-rec slowpitch softball will be held April 2 at 7 p.m. in 137 IM Sports-Circle.

Co-rec one-pitch softball will be held April 3 at 6 p.m. in 106 IM Sports-Circle.

The following are team entry deadlines (all women's and co-rec team sports entries may be turned in to office 121 IM

NCR/Wichita introduces the stress-relieving, expense-paid weekend.

► Worried about where you'll be 5-10 years from now?

We'll tell you about ground floor opportunities in VLSI technology, or areas like Resource Partitioned Architecture.

► Worried about two-narrow specialization?

We'll tell you how we make "Total Systems" involvement a day-to-day reality, and about our flexible methodology and informal hardware/software taskforce approach to problem-solving.

► Worried about high-stress living?

We'll give you a look at a lifestyle that's affordable, unhurried, uncrowded, smog-free. A city of half a million where neighbors greet one another, and where you can be home in 10-15 minutes of light traffic driving.

► Worried about isolation? Obsolescence?

We'll tell you about the interactive minis and micros we're designing, and how you can help us continue to lead the way in Distributed Networking, Data Communications, Direct Migration, New Automated Languages . . . and a dozen other areas.

Laetrile legalization still alive in Senate

Kelsey said the committee is "spinning its wheels" and vowed to ask Senate Democratic Leader William Faust of Westland to force the bill out of committee by the drastic discharge procedure—a majority vote on the Senate floor.

Pierce, after hearing more of the emotional testimony from cancer victims and relatives that has marked two years of legislative action on the bill, said he wanted to wait to determine whether the National Cancer Institute and the Food and Drug Administration will carry out plans for a comprehensive test on Laetrile's effects on cancer patients.

If the test is not under way by July 1, Pierce proposed to call a state panel of experts to try to determine whether cancer victims are helped by Laetrile.

But committee members doubted any new answers would arise from additional testing.

PORNO TONIGHT!!!
BUSTED IN DETROIT
AND BEAL IS SHOWING IT UNCUT—NOT ONE FRAME HAS BEEN DELETED OF THIS SUPER HARDCORE FILM

YOUR WILDEST DREAMS NEVER WENT SO FAR!

"Sensations" IS SUPERB!
This film is so hot that I recommend that any theatre preparing to exhibit it, wallpaper their place with asbestos to prevent it burning to the ground!"
AL GOLDSTEIN

"Sensations" IS A SENSUALLY PULSATING SEXTRAVAGANZA!
BRUCE WILLIAMSON/PLAYBOY

"Sensations" IS WHAT PORNO—GOOD PORNO—SHOULD BE ALL ABOUT."

MANY PEOPLE ARE INTO IDENTICAL, BLAND LIVES...
MAYBE YOU CAN DO SOMETHING DIFFERENT!
Consider spending 1/30th of your life as a Peace Corps or a Vista volunteer. It's an adventure but it won't be easy. If you need pampering then maybe you'd better think of something else. But if you're concerned about basic problems which affect people all over the world—food and water, health and housing, jobs and social justice—and are not afraid to spend one or two years in a different environment, maybe the Peace Corps or Vista is for you.

State News: Ira Strickstein

Accused woman attempted suicide

GAYLORD (UPI) — A battered housewife claiming self-defense in the kitchen-knife slaying of her husband once attempted suicide in a fit of depression over her marital problems, a son testified Tuesday.

The disclosure preceded by just a few hours the first testimony from the defendant, British-born Jeannette Smith, 45, charged with second-degree murder in the May 12, 1978, slaying of her husband, Herman, 66, at their home in Kalkaska.

"Mother attempted to commit suicide," Beasley said. "She snuck out to meet Smith at a restaurant. My brother David and I yelled at her. She was hoping he would change. We kept yelling at her and she ran to her room and locked the door. I got worried because I heard her crying. I busted down the bedroom door and found an empty bottle of pills, so we rushed her to the hospital."

Beasley said Smith also threatened him repeatedly and that the threats became more violent after he persuaded his mother to leave Smith and rented a house for her to live in.

He said Smith once attempted to set fire to the house by throwing a can of oil through the window, but it failed to ignite.

Mrs. Smith told a reporter for the Traverse City Record-Eagle in a jailhouse interview months ago that she had been subjected to numerous beatings during the on-again, off-again, four-year marriage and that she felt like a prisoner "in a concentration camp."
