Chavez says boycott lettuce

By MICHAEL VEH
State News Staff Writer

United Farm Workers President Cesar Chavez urged support for the boycott of Red Coach lettuce Thursday addressing a "magnificent" crowd at the MSU union.

Chavez, called by former East Lansing Mayor George Griffiths "one of the few real national leaders," was in East Lansing as part of his six-day tour of the state.

Before coming to MSU, Chavez addressed a joint session of the Michigan Legislature. Speaking to an estimated crowd of 600, Chavez urged support for the lettuce boycott and explained the plight of the farm workers' and their families.

Red Coach brand lettuce is produced by Bruce Church, Inc., the third largest lettuce grower in the nation.

THE UFW IS boycotting the brand because Bruce Church, Inc., refuses to sign a UFW contract.

"It's a great tragedy that the men, women and children who are the instruments of production of so much food don't have enough food to feed themselves," Chavez said.

The majority of the estimated 3.5 to 5 million farm workers in America are minorities, he said, with most being migrant workers.

Chavez said the lives of these migrant workers are in an "uproar" because they do not receive the basic benefits that are guaranteed to most other workers.

Farm workers were excluded from the National Labor Relations Law in 1955 and not guaranteed a right to collective bargaining, Chavez said.

"FROM THAT (ORIGINAL) exclusion; from that sin of omission, more injustice, more abuse and more helplessness and powerlessness has come to this segment of American workers than any other act that has been done in the history of this country," he said.

He also pointed out that many state and federal governments still exclude farm workers from protection under new labor laws.

Farm workers could fight their poverty themselves if given the chance they deserve, he said.

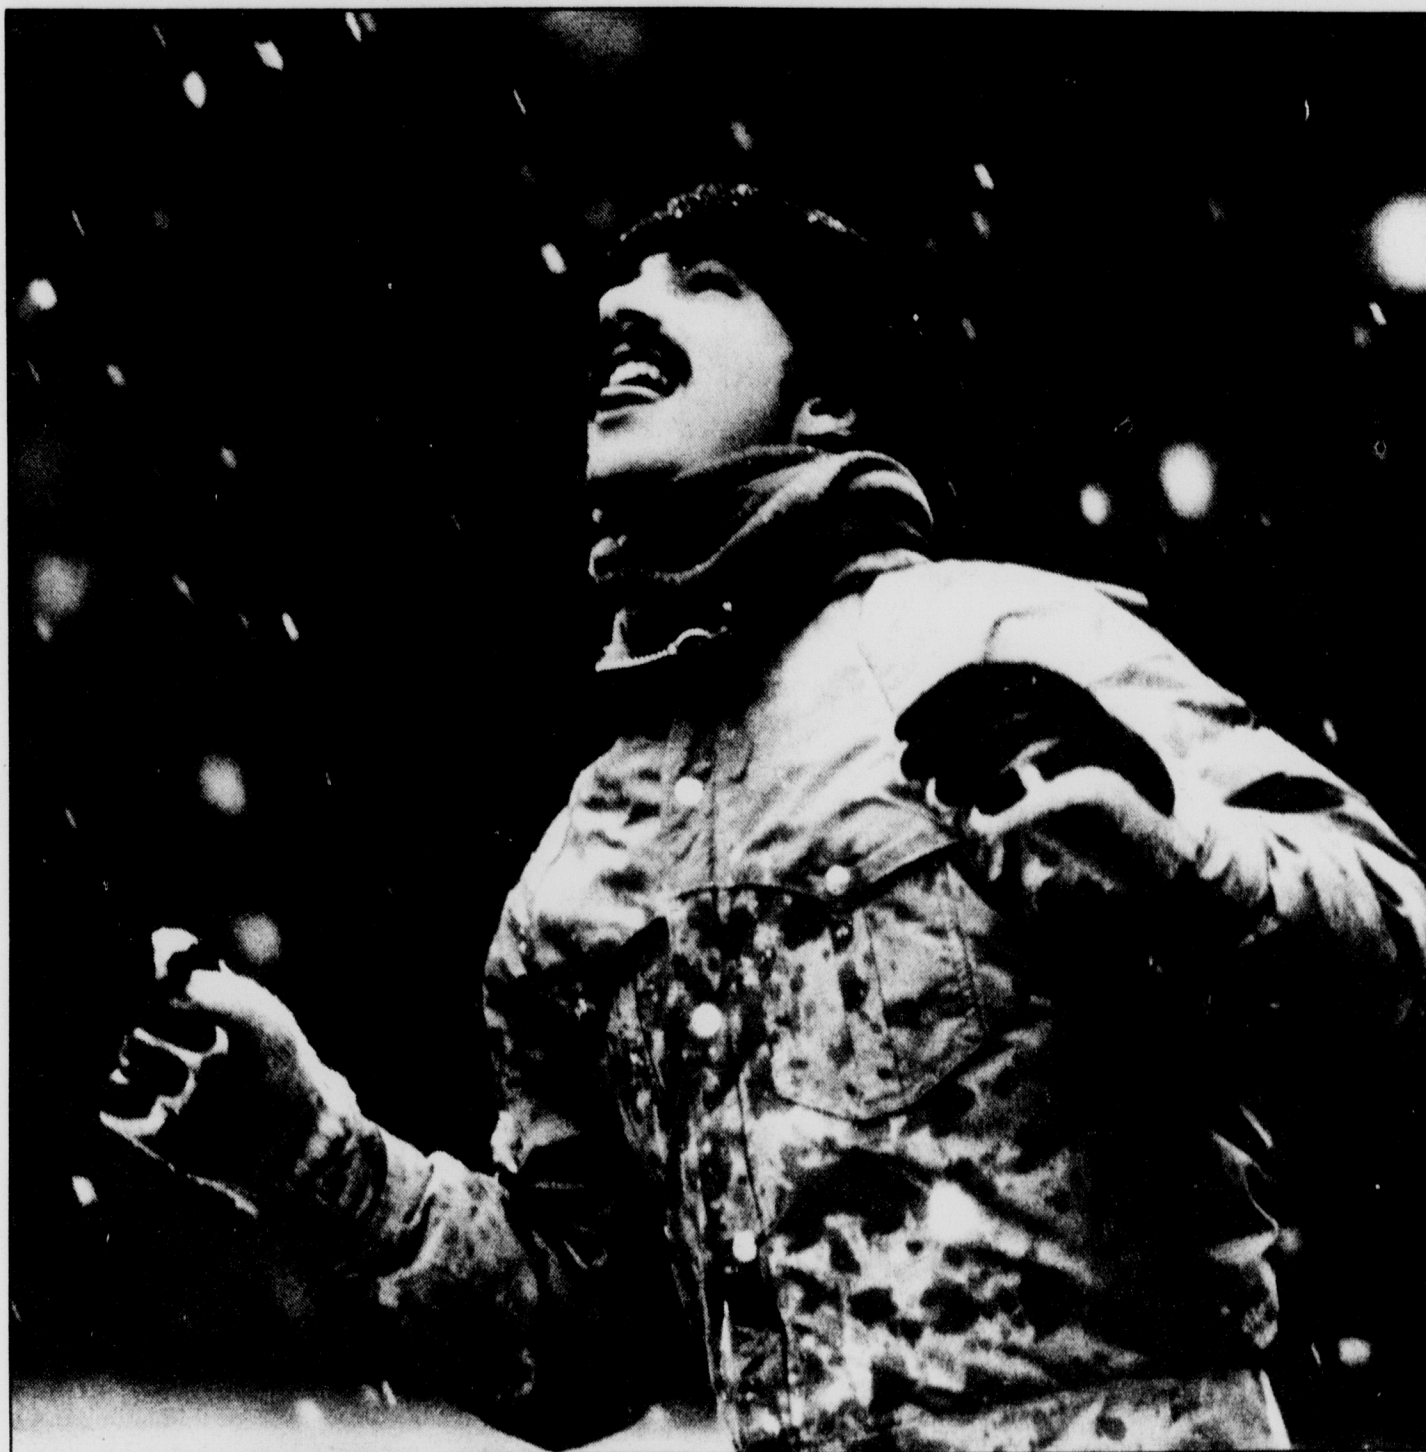

"You give farm workers in the United States the right to organize, the right to collective bargaining and they will take care of all their economic problems including health, education, housing and so forth," he said.

IF THE GROWERS would be forced to recognize the UFW, the conditions surrounding the lives of the migrant workers could be vastly improved, Chavez said.

He pointed out that efforts toward organization are disrupted by strike breakers who "smuggle in undocumented workers" to fill in for the striking laborers.

"They (the growers) have developed a group of professional strike breakers, like no other industry in the history of this country," he said.

Chavez said that boycotts are a way of getting around strikes and strike breakers.

The Middle East is in turmoil, the dollar is getting weaker by the day and final exams are approaching, but Brian Way, a senior in personnel management, feels that the simple things in life are just as important, such as catching snowflakes on his tongue during Thursday's snowfall.

Carter: Iranians are liable

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Carter said Thursday the Iranian government is "fully responsible" for the safety of some 60 Americans held hostage in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and "will be held accountable."

Carter, in his harshest statement about the actions of Iranian leaders in the 12-day-old crisis, said he found it "unthinkable that any responsible government" would try to pressure another nation by using diplomats as barter.

In a related occurrence, Iran took President Carter's embargo on U.S. oil imports from Iran one step further Thursday, halting sales of oil to American companies for delivery anywhere in the world.

Addressing the convention of the AFL-CIO, the president said the seizure of the embassy and the Americans stationed there violated basic principles of international law. He vowed that the students occupying the embassy will not sway American policy.

"THIS IS AN act of terrorism totally outside the bounds of international law and diplomatic tradition," Carter said. "This crisis calls for firmness and restraint."

But Carter also said the United States "will not compromise our fundamental principle of justice, no matter how grave the provocation."

He added: "The United States of America will not yield to international terrorism or blackmail."

The president said the taking of the hostages has resulted in "anger and outrage" from Americans. However, Carter said, the United States will do nothing that endangers the safety of the hostages.

He said the situation calls for patience, perseverance and "measured, deliberate action."

The president said the U.S. government will continue to use its influence around the world to obtain the safe release of the hostages and will take no action "that could be used to justify violence or imprudent action by anyone."

THE STUDENTS WHO attacked and overran the embassy Nov. 4 have demanded that the United States return the deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi to Iran for trial as a war criminal. The shah is being treated for cancer in a New York hospital and the U.S. government has flatly refused to bow to the Iranian demand.

Carter's efforts to negotiate with the Iranian government have been stalled at every turn. His personal emissary, Ramsey Clark, was not allowed into Iran and remained in Turkey for a week before being recalled on Wednesday.

The Iranian government also has resisted the efforts of third countries to negotiate the release of the hostages.

In his strongest attack on the Iranian government, Carter also said: "An embassy is not a fortress. There are no embassies that can long withstand the attack of a mob if the mob has the backing of the host government itself."

Carter said all nations accept the inviolability of foreign embassies.

THERE HAS BEEN some criticism of the administration for failing to evacuate the embassy when it became clear that the

Yearning for home grows among Iranians

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A growing number of Iranian students, concerned about their safety and faced with a possible shortage of funds, say they want to return home, a spokesperson for the Iranian Embassy said Thursday.

"Some students are calling us and saying they would like to go back to Iran," said Hossein Ava, an embassy press officer. While he had no estimate of the number of students involved, he said the embassy has received calls from students in Oklahoma, Massachusetts and Wisconsin, among others.

"They are worried about their security. Some of them have been harassed, and they are not secure anymore," he said.

Ava said the embassy had sent a cable to officials in Tehran seeking instructions. He said it might be better "to get a charter (aircraft) to evacuate" all the students who want to leave, rather than have them return individually.

Some incidents of harassment of Iranian students have been reported from cities across the country in the wake of the seizure of some 60 Americans at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. But for the most part, the incidents have been minor and not widespread.

President Carter has ordered a review of the visas of all of the 50,000 Iranian students in the United States to make sure they are in order.

AN ADDITIONAL PROBLEM for some students has resulted from Carter's decision Wednesday to freeze all Iranian government assets in the United States. The assets are valued between $5 billion to $6 billion.

Many of the Iranian students receive scholarship assistance from the Iranian government, and the freeze at least temporarily blocks the government payments.

Iranian embassy representatives appealed to Treasury Department officials in a meeting Wednesday for an exemption to the freeze to allow the student payments to continue. They were told to provide details of the money they would need and for what purpose, and this was done on Thursday.

Stanley M. Sommerfield, the director of the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control, said in an interview Thursday that "the matter is under urgent consideration," but added he didn't know when it would be resolved.

Meanwhile, a sociologist at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn., Anthony Oberschall, said Americans shouldn't let anger and frustration with Iranian students in Tehran result in reprisals against innocent Iranian students in the United States.

Carter has urged Americans not to get caught up in anti-Iranian emotion.

Committee to form campus safety program

By PAUL CURTIS
State News Staff Writer

To make the MSU campus as safe as possible, an advisory committee is being organized to formulate a "comprehensive, university-wide safety program," said Moses Turner, vice president for student affairs.

"We want to make the campus as safe as possible, but better than that, we want the students to know that they are safe while they are enrolled at MSU," Turner said.

The advisory committee will be made up of "resource persons" from DPS, Olin Health Center, the Counseling Center and residence halls management, Turner said.

SOME GRADUATE AND undergraduate students will also be on the committee, he added.

The committee "will draw on the best possible resources to get information about (student and campus) needs," he said, and do everything possible to satisfy those needs. Turner said he will receive input from the committee to help establish the program. The committee will also be concerned with finding preventive measures and what to do after-the-fact, he said.

The safety program, which is expected to be implemented by winter term, will consist of three parts, Turner said. The first part will supply more lighting, emergency phones and equipment and safety vehicles, as well as other preventive measures.

The second part of the program will be counseling centers to take care "of emotional stress that comes about from being involved in physical violence, theft, burglary or rape," Turner said.

THE THIRD PART will be an education program to inform students of crime potentials, and orient staff members who work with students, particularly in the residence halls, he said.

"We want to put students in the best possible position to avoid (potential) crime situations," Turner said.

The need for the program is not because of increased violence on campus, Turner said. "We feel that the campus is relatively safe."

"THE WOMEN ON campus need to have a feeling of security on campus," he said. "The conditions that make them (women) apprehensive warrant our attention."

"Educating the student public about campus safety is a goal of this program," Turner said. "The process has begun. We will get the job done."

"The details are not in place yet, but some of the services will be implemented as soon as plans are finalized," he said.

Engineers job market still unclear

By KY OWEN
and REGINALD THOMAS
State News Staff Writers

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last of a two-part series dealing with the hiring of foreign engineers by U.S. companies. This part deals with the engineering job market.

There is a constant and high demand for graduating engineers according to figures compiled by the MSU Placement Services Office.

Mechanical, electrical, chemical and computer science engineers are some of the most sought after members in the industry, according to placement office figures. Although there is a bright economic outlook for these disciplines, the aerospace industry looks bleak.

A controversial suit, filed Oct. 16 in Los Angeles Central Circuit Court, has brought about some questions as to what the aerospace market is really like.

The American Engineering Association filed the suit stating that seven aeronautic companies are creating false shortages in an attempt to hold down the wages of American aerospace engineers.

The suit charges that seven U.S. firms are importing "cheap foreign labor," and by doing so are violating immigration laws.

U.S. COMPANIES ARE allowed to bring in foreign labor when there is a shortage of such labor in the United States, and the AEA believes the companies are fabricating shortages.

Richard L. Hurwitz, chairperson of AEA, said he believes some employment offices have coded engineering jobs "99," which means the company wants to hire an alien for the job.

At one California employment office Hurwitz was told a certain job was for an alien, and there was no use in applying.

"They're doing Americans a favor, but this shows no Americans are available," he said.

This is one of the reasons Hurwitz said the "shortage (of engineers) is a myth."

The companies cited in the suit are Boeing Corp., Lockheed Corp., McDonnell-Douglas Corp., Northrop Corp.,

ANALYSIS

Martin Marietta Corp., General Electric, and a Grumman Corp. unit.

Two engineering referral firms are also included in the suit, LPL Technical Services of Los Angeles and CDI Corp. of Philadelphia.

THE AEA is a splinter group that arose after eight members of the Council of Engineering Scientist Organization (CESO) became disgruntled with CESO's lackadaisical effort in surveying the engineering market.

But CESO, like the seven companies named in the suit, claims there is a shortage of qualified American engineers who are willing to move to Los Angeles and Seattle, Wash.

Frank R. Wall, communications director of the AEA, said there are over half a million engineers who are either unemployed or underemployed in America.

A worker is considered underemploy-ed when he is working at a job that is below his abilities.

Wall said he bases these figures on the 1969 projection that there were 1.5 to 1.6 million practicing engineers in this country.

There are currently only 1.1 million practicing engineers in the United States, Wall said.

HE EXPLAINED THE aerospace engineering market has a very cyclical nature. Wall said the aerospace job market fluctuates every seven years and he and other engineers expect to be unemployed by 1982.

Kenneth J. Kukuda, attorney for the AEA, called the engineering market "a peak and valley situation."

Larry Kolb, of Boeing Corp., said 12 years ago there was a surplus of engineers and Boeing had to lay off some of them.

Kolb said the industry is cyclical, and in 1980 the market will probably tighten up — but not as much as it did in 1968.

"My personal opinion is that there will be no severe downward trends," he said. "We are hiring extensively now but we will probably begin to flatten out in '81."

"But right now is a good time to be graduating with a degree from an accredited school," he added.

HURWITZ SAID ENGINEERING is a two-tiered market, with separate markets for experienced and recent graduates.

Most college graduates enter the direct employment market, going to work for a company on a regular basis.

After five years, many engineers enter the contract market, which involves taking particular jobs on a temporary basis, Hurwitz said.

Many workers go into the contract market because the "pay is much better," Hurwitz said. Contract engineers earn about 50 percent more than company engineers because their employers do not have to pay for pensions and vacations.

He added that the base rate for college graduates is quite high, but salaries peak after five to 10 years, and some engineers with 20 and 30 years experience are making less money than engineers with less experience.

AFTER THE NASA programs peaked in 1966 the number of engineers dropped from 220,000 to 213,000 from 1968 to 1969. At the same time, total aerospace industry employment fell by 50,000.

The New York Times reported in 1973 that "contrary to popular belief" there was a shortage of engineers.

Defense and space program cutbacks did not drastically affect the supply, but "engineering was seen as a handmaiden of arms production and industrial pollution," said Arthur Humphrey, then dean of engineering and applied sciences at the University of Pennsylvania.

Jack Shingleton, director of the MSU Placement Services Office, said engineers were more "mechanical" in the 1960s and early 1970s, but have now become more socially well-rounded.

Breakthrough in Rhodesian peace talks

LONDON (AP) — Both sides at the Zimbabwe-Rhodesia peace talks accepted Britain's plan for interim administration on Thursday, raising hopes for a final agreement within two weeks to end the war that ravages the country.

The peace talks now move to the final stage — cease-fire negotiations.

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, the conference chairperson, said he was "delighted" by the agreement, extracted after weeks of hard bargaining and thinly veiled British threats to recognize

Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa's embattled administration if the rebel alliance persisted in its objections.

Twenty-four hours of intense communication culminated in a crucial meeting of all parties Thursday morning, a day after Carrington's last deadline for rebel acceptance expired.

Britain amended its original plan to specify that the Patriotic Front rebels would, like government troops, come under direct authority of the proposed British governor during the cease-fire.

Collision in Bosphorus Strait causes oil spill

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — A massive oil slick threatened the coast near the entrance of the Bosphorus Strait on Thursday following an explosive collision of an oil tanker and a freighter. At least three sailors were killed and 47 were missing.

The slick, 30 million gallons, spread over seven miles, menaced the old section of Istanbul and authorities called on residents "to be on alert" in the event the floating oil caught fire.

A rescue spokesperson said, "We are not very hopeful for the fate of the 47 missing sailors."

The 150,000-ton Romanian tanker Independenta had a crew of 53. Officials said only three crew members survived the early morning accident that sparked a string of explosions in the holds of the Romania-bound craft.

The tanker collided with the 7,596-ton Greek freighter Evria, carrying a cargo of steel coils from Soviet Union to Italy.

None of the 25 crew members of the Greek ship was injured, and scattered flames aboard were extinguished. It was towed to Samatya, off the western outskirts of Istanbul.

Alcohol 'too risky' to prescribe

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — A panel of doctors, nervous about reports that two drinks a day may protect against heart attack, says the risk of alcoholism is too great to justify ever recommending liquor to non-drinkers.

"I can't see us ever telling someone to start drinking (to protect his heart). It's just too risky," Dr. William P. Castelli of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute said Thursday.

"You might tell somebody who is prone to alcoholism and that would destroy his whole life and his family."

The problem, he said, is that many people simply will not be able to take two drinks a day and then stop. He cited proven health hazards of excessive drinking and said the United States already has about 17 million alcoholics.

But the three doctors, speaking at a news conference during an American Heart Association conference here, also agreed with a recently published study on drinking and heart disease.

The study, published in the Nov. 2 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, said "daily consumption of small to moderate amounts of alcohol has been shown to be associated with lowered risk of coronary heart disease."

Children return to class during strike

HONOLULU (AP) — Students returned to class Thursday for the first time in nearly three weeks as 108 of Hawaii's 228 public schools reopened after parent volunteers cleaned up the grime built up during a continuing statewide strike by public workers.

More schools were expected to be open Friday after being cleaned and given clearance by state health officials.

"It's just like the first day of school over again," said one mother as she walked her two children into Royal Elementary School along with other excited youngsters.

Police give computer the third degree

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Police who grilled a stubborn computer for more than nine hours say they have forced it to divulge what they believe are the names and addresses of 192 bettors on football games.

The small home computer was confiscated Nov. 9 in a gambling raid that led to charges against four Tulsa residents.

After police and computer experts tossed aside phony codes, they discovered two other codes that caused the computer to spill its memory.

One code revealed names, addresses and phone numbers of persons believed to be regular customers of the alleged bookmaker. Another list connected those names to numbers detailing bets, made and won-loss results, police believe.

Authorities say information seized from the computer and from written records indicates that the operation netted $181,000 profit for the week before the computer was confiscated.

"We anticipate the number of the 192 — or others if we discover them — being subpoenaed to District Court as witnesses against those we arrested," said Lt. Drew Diamond of the Organized Crime Division.

Bomb explodes on plane, no one injured

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American Airlines 727 with 80 persons aboard landed safely at Dulles International Airport Thursday after a small bomb exploded in a mail pouch in the cargo hold, the FBI reported.

No one was hurt and only minor damage was done to the plane.

The plane, American flight 444, was en route from Chicago to Washington's National Airport when the pilot reported it was filling with smoke. The plane was diverted to Dulles, about 25 miles from Washington.

"It has been determined that an explosive device detonated in the cargo compartment of the aircraft while it was in flight," the FBI said.

Airline spokesperson David Lobb said the 72 passengers and 8 crew members got off the plane without incident. He said the device apparently detonated in a mail pouch.

He said the aircraft suffered slight damage, most of it caused by firefighters when they chopped a small hole in the compartment.

The FBI and the National Transportation Safety Board were investigating the incident.

Meany bids farewell to AFL-CIO

By OWEN ULLMANN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON — George Meany, the gruff and powerful voice for a generation of working people, bade a tearful goodbye to his "house of labor" Thursday with a call for new leaders and policies to keep the AFL-CIO in step with the changing world.

The AFL-CIO, which Meany helped forge in 1955 and has ruled ever since, "is alive and well," said the retiring 85-year-old labor leader in a farewell address to an emotion-swept federation convention.

But "the labor movement cannot be content with defending the status quo or reliving past glories," said Meany, who has long been criticized for failing to keep the AFL-CIO up with changing times.

"We must constantly look to the future, develop new leadership, adapt policies to changing conditions and new technologies."

A GAUNT AND ashen Meany, confined to a wheelchair, thanked the 1,000 delegates attending the opening convention session "for the highest honor that could be paid any human being — the honor of leading this great organization of workers who have built this nation."

The convention responded with a long, whistling ovation.

Delegates applauded him when Meany, crippled since April by an arthritic hip, was wheeled into the convention hall.

The former plumber managed to put forth his usual stern grimace throughout most of his 15-minute address, and his Bronx-accented voice, though weakened by age and illness, remained unemotional until the very end.

BUT THEN, EVEN tough old George Meany was unable to restrain the tears. Twice his voice choked, and only with difficulty could he utter in a shaking voice: "To God go my prayers . . . of thanks for granting me more than one man's share of happiness and rewards, and prayers for his continued blessing on this nation and on this movement and on each of you."

The delegates, many weeping with Meany, roared back in tribute to him, and he, his face sullen, waved back. When he tried to gavel the ovation to an end, the delegates refused to give the iron-willed labor patriarch his way.

There will be a new leader, AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurer Lane Kirkland, Meany's protégé and hand-picked successor.

JEWISH POPULATION TO INCREASE

Israel expands settlements

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel adopted a settlement plan for the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River Thursday that would more than triple the Jewish population there in the next year.

The plan envisioned continued expansion of Jewish settlements for at least three years — beyond the scheduled start of Palestinian self-rule in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Washington has said Israeli settlements in the West Bank are illegal under international law and are obstacles in the drive for a solution of the Palestinian issue.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin, meanwhile, met with leaders of the Elon Moreh settlement to try to persuade them to evacuate their outpost, which the Supreme Court has ruled was built on illegally seized Arab land.

The settlers so far have refused to move by the Nov. 22 deadline the court set. But Cabinet Secretary Arieh Naor reaffirmed the government's determination to move the settlers to another site nearby.

Publication of the plan, the first master plan ever officially adopted by an Israeli Cabinet, was certain to ignite unrest in the West Bank, where Palestinians already are furious over the expected deportation of the nationalist Arab mayor of Nablus.

A government statement reporting the Cabinet committee's decision said the plan called for 10,000 to 15,000 new housing units per year.

Deputy Defense Minister

Mordechai Zippori said the aim of the plan was to "triple and even more" the number of Jews — now 14,000 — living in more than 50 West Bank settlements.

The Cabinet statement said the new housing would be restricted to five large blocs comprised of 19 "settlement points," in already established settlement areas. Naor said the government avoided describing the points as full-fledged settlements.

Mt. Sinai returns to Egyptian control

MOUNT SINAI, Egypt (AP) — Israel ended its 12-year occupation of this area Thursday and returned it to Egypt, whose soldiers hoisted their black, white and red flag near the mountain where Moses is said to have received the Ten Commandments.

In ceremonies at an airstrip within view of the 2,285-foot peak, Israeli soldiers pulled down the Star of David banner two months ahead of schedule at the special request of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

It was the fourth of a six-phase Israeli pullout that will have Egypt with control of two-thirds of the desert peninsula by Jan. 25, Egypt, which lost the lands in the 1967 Mideast War, is to regain them by 1982 under terms of the peace treaty signed in March.

Egyptian Brig. Gen. Seif el Din Abu Snaf, in a brief speech, pointed to the early withdrawal as proof "we are moving ahead." He said it is evidence that "disproves all the lies and hatred of the rejection front," referring to Arab nations which reject the Egyptian-Israeli treaty.

The Israelis withdrew early so Sadat could come to Mount Sinai to celebrate the second anniversary of his Nov. 19, 1977 trip to Jerusalem.

Ford predicts big loss

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co., while predicting a loss of more than $1 billion on North American car and truck operations, said Thursday that it would show an overall profit for the year anyway — with help from a rigid cost-cutting plan.

Despite the gloomy pronouncements on the U.S. and Canadian markets, Ford executives said profits from overseas and elsewhere could give the No. 2 automaker its third-best year ever. And they repeated denials that Ford would follow Chrysler Corp. into a money crunch.

The loss figure was disclosed in a Nov. 1 memorandum by William O. Bourke, executive vice president in charge of North American automotive operations. Ford confirmed the contents of the memorandum after several articles appeared about it.

Bourke said he was increasing an earlier North American loss estimate of $875 million. "Our full-year losses are now projected at $1,035 million. Further, the present 1980 budget outlook is for a continuation of losses of about this magnitude."

"The fourth quarter is not going to be a good one, that's clear," said Vice President Allan D. Gilmour, Ford's controller. "But I don't want to give the impression this is going to continue for 12 months."

Gilmour dismissed comparisons with Chrysler: "We have business operations in which Chrysler doesn't participate; we have newer, more efficient plants; we have a better mix of vehicle options; we've got a better dealer network; and we have new cars coming out that are being favorably received."

He said the company as a whole in the fourth quarter would be "at break-even point or a little below." A break-even quarter would give Ford profits for the year of $1.2 billion, third best in its history.

REVISES STUDENT RIGHTS

COGS OKs document

By LESA DOLL

The Council of Graduate Students enthusiastically approved the proposed Students Rights Document Wednesday evening.

COGS is the third organization to approve the new document, which will now be presented to the Academic Council, Student Council and Graduate Council for discussion.

"The document has been long in coming," said Chuck Goeke, chairperson of the Student Affairs Committee and a member of COGS.

The proposed document is a combination of the Academic Freedom Report, the Graduate Student Rights and Responsibilities Handbook and the Interim Rights for Medical Students report, Goeke said.

The Student Affairs Committee was charged to combine the three documents and make revisions when necessary.

"IT REALLY JUST combines everything," Goeke said, "as well as expediting the non-academic judiciary."

The restructuring of the judiciary process in the proposed document has been designed to include graduate students and medical students — provisions that the prior document lacked. The system now includes a Living Group Judiciary and a University Student Group Judiciary, with appeals going to the University Appellate Judiciary.

Besides those changes, the document is basically a conceptual reproduction and combination of the existing documents, Goeke added.

"I feel that after the work that went into this document, as well as being reviewed by COGS, ASMSU and medical students, that it is acceptable," he said. "But, this is one of those things that has to have everybody's approval. There's a lot of other approval bodies after us."

The major concern with the document is that it will not be passed by all required bodies in time. The MSU Board of Trustees turned down a motion six months ago to set the deadline for document approval by November.

If the document is held up in committee, the motion will be made again and it will pass, said COGS President Sharon Cogdill. This, she said, may result in a loss of certain rights.

MSU prof, students study impact of pumped storage power plant

By KARL BLANKENSHIP
State News Staff Writer

Just south of Ludington is the largest pumped storage power plant in the world.

It has a reservoir two and one-half miles long, three quarters of a mile wide, and 100 feet deep.

But the water level in the reservoir fluctuates as much as 70 feet a day as water is pumped in every night and then drains out the following day.

Wait a minute — it's not as crazy as it sounds.

IT SAVES ENERGY, and unlike many energy related projects it produces no on-site pollution.

Charles Liston, an MSU assistant professor of fisheries and wildlife, who has led an eight-year research project to study the environmental impact of the plant, compares the reservoir to a giant battery.

Other power plants operating at optimum levels produce more energy than is needed at night, Liston said, so some of that energy which normally would be wasted, is used to pump the reservoir full of water.

In the daytime, when energy demand is high, the water is released, driving turbines on the way out, he added.

This system, which is about 70 percent energy efficient, produces 1872 megawatts, or about three times the capacity of Lansing's Board of Water and Light.

LISTON HAS BEEN leading research at the plant since 1971 to see how the plant has affected local aquatic ecosystems.

The research is funded by Consumers Power and Detroit Edison, the owners of the plant. The companies were required by the Federal Power Commission to fund the studies as part of the license requirements.

In the course of their investigation, Liston and the MSU students doing the study, have found few major environmental problems.

They looked for such things as temperature changes in the water or chemical pollution, but found none, Liston said.

"Essentially we cannot find any significant changes in the ecological system in the lake," he said. "We didn't expect to find major changes as there are no chemicals or anything added."

THE ONLY POSSIBLE harm done may be to the fish populations as thousands of fish get sucked up by the pumps, many of which are killed, Liston said.

Although their research didn't show a decline in local fish populations, Liston said Lake Michigan is so large that the fish loss could be diluted by other fish migrating into the Ludington area.

The actual impact on fish populations may not be known for several years, he said.

"I feel that some sort of a (fish) put-back system would help," Liston added.

The construction of a hatchery to restock the fish supplies would help replace fish taken out by the plant, as well as possibly (continued on page 16)

Economic factors determine future of James Madison

By SUE ROBACH

State News Staff Writer

The task force appointed to assess the role and structure of James Madison College has determined the college will either become part of the college of Social Science or maintain status quo, said Assistant Provost Dorothy Arata.

"Right now, we're looking at these two possibilities," said Arata, who is also the chairperson of the study group.

The task force, appointed by the Academic Council, has met on four occasions and determined these as feasible structural options for the college.

Provost Clarence L. Winder requested a reassessment of the college in September.

STRUCTURAL OPTIONS ARE being reviewed only as they relate to organizational placement for the college and not to the quality of its programs, Winder said.

"The University clearly recognizes, supports and protects the quality of Madison (college) in its review," Arata said.

The task force is working to determine the best organizational structure for the college that will not diminish the quality of the institution, she said.

Arata said financial and economic-related stress factors, predicted for the future, are reasons for the review.

"In the next decade there will be stress factors on the college," she said. "We want to determine what is the best way to protect the qualities of the college."

THE COLLEGE MAY be in a vulnerable position because of the projected decline in student enrollment within the college, Arata said.

Also of concern is the fact that James Madison faculty members are somewhat isolated from colleagues in other colleges, Arata added.

The task force designed to review the college includes six voting members and three non-voting members.

The voting members include Lester Manderscheid, Steering Committee chairperson; Russel B. Nye, distinguished professor of English and faculty member at-large; Leslie Route, history professor and faculty member at-large; Henry Smith, Social Science faculty member; Karla Harby, James Madison College student; and Kenneth Waltzer, James Madison College faculty member.

Arata said the group expects to meet its Dec. 14 deadline with Winder.

Rape program starts heated debate about responsibility and attitudes

By MOLLY MIKA

State News Staff Writer

Approximately 100 persons gathered Tuesday night in the Union to attend a rape program that evolved into a heated debate over what type of person is responsible for rape.

Karen Karelius-Schumacher, coordinator of the MSU Women's Resource Center, and Dan Wasserman, intern at the MSU Counseling Center, initiated discussion at the program titled "Rape: A Problem for All."

"Rape is not a woman's issue, it's an issue that needs to be addressed by all members of society," said Karelius-Schumacher. "We also need to address the concept of sexuality in this country."

Wasserman, who was asked to speak particularly to the men in the audience, said that he was not an expert on rape.

"I STARTED LEARNING about rape when a very close friend of mine was raped and came to my door afterwards," he said.

Wasserman said that before his friend was raped, he had believed the myth that rape is primarily a sexual crime, rather than a violent crime, and the myth that most rapes occur between strangers, rather than between acquaintances or even friends.

The speakers encouraged those in the audience to think about their own awareness of rape and voice their concerns.

"I think men are tired of being hated by women, tired of being told that we did it or we created the circumstances that caused rape," said one man in the audience. "Isn't it true that there's a certain type of person that rapes women?"

"There's no pat formula that decides who the rapist is or what he looks like. Studies show a large percentage occur between casual acquaintances — those who meet in class or on a first date, for example," said Amedah Rashid, counselor at the MSU Counseling Center and former director of the Rape Crisis Center in Flint.

"A LOT OF times men try to label certain psychological types as rapists so they can isolate themselves from the men who rape," said Don Ayers, one of the coordinators of the Sexual Assault Counseling Staff at Listening Ear.

"It helps to detach ourselves from rapists because it makes it harder to assess the possibility that is in each of us," he said.

Ayers said by seeking a "composite" rapist, a man avoids the issue that it could be him.

Wasserman asked the audience what they thought might motivate men to rape women. The responses were that men who rape are motivated by feelings of rejection or by a desire for power or a desire to do something that society regards as evil.

"It makes me angry to hear that," said one woman. "It's justifying rape and there's no reason why rape should ever occur."

"I WOULD LIKE to add that I bet there's not one woman here tonight who has not been verbally assaulted," she said. "It makes me mad to know that men feel this way about my body."

"I don't think we're trying to justify rape, we're just trying to explain it," another woman responded.

"We need to examine the concept of sexuality in this country," said Karelius-Schumacher.

She said that one misguided concept of sexuality might be that boys are taught to force themselves on women and that women ultimately want to be pressed for sex. This creates the myth that women who say "no" are really saying "yes."

Insurance law can be effective

The insurance bill signed into law Tuesday by Gov. Milliken is a step in the right direction toward providing fair insurance rates for all state residents. The bill establishes specific guidelines for determining insurance rates, and rates that are found to be discriminatory can be prohibited by the insurance commissioner. People in poorer neighborhoods have traditionally been charged higher rates than people in more affluent ones. There are other factors which determine a person's insurance rates which should not be considered. An area's racial make-up is one of those factors. A person's age is another, especially in determining auto insurance rates.

Differences in rates solely because of factors like those are unfair and discriminatory. Insurance companies will now be required by law to determine auto and home insurance rates only on factors within a person's control. A person's driving record, or the amount of security devices on a person's home, will now become leading factors in deciding how much people will be charged.

This law will not be a panacea, for twenty different auto insurance rate structures based on a driver's location will still be allowed. In addition, the highest home insurance rates companies charge can still be 140 percent of the lowest rate it charges. In light of high insurance rates, this may be a large difference in the actual cost of insurance.

The biggest short-coming of this law is that insurance companies might simply raise the rates they charge in one area in order to accommodate the limitation of price differentials between areas. It is unlikely that rates would be cut.

The law will require companies to publicly file their rates and the policies they use in setting those rates. As long as information about rates is easily accessible, people would be able to shop around for the cheapest rates available. Insurance companies would then be forced to charge competitive rates if they wanted to stay in business.

Grievance plan no aid to faculty

Students at MSU are not the only persons here having difficulties with the way University decisions are made. Since 1972, some faculty have tried to revamp the University grievance procedure, but their efforts have largely been unsuccessful. It appears that they will continue to be unsuccessful.

This may be so because the new grievance proposal presented by Provost Clarence L. Winder is not acceptable. Winder's plan neither confronts nor attempts to solve problems faculty members are concerned about. More specifically, faculty promotions — which are the largest area of faculty complaints — may no longer be considered formal grievances. How can a grievance procedure be effective if the faculty vehemently objects to its basic principles? The attempt to remove grievances of promotions, reappointments and tenure from the administrative grievance process virtually leaves the faculty without an outlet at which to direct problems.

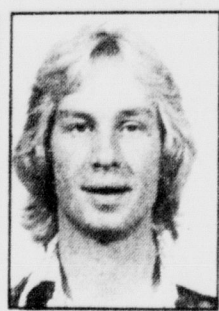

Winder's proposal places too much power in the hands of a selected group of administrators. They have excessive control in manipulating the faculty by suppressing complaints.

Winder's plan, essentially, provides for nothing more than cosmetic relief. It does not address grievances over salaries, which are a major concern among the faculty.

One of the most blaring inadequacies in Winder's proposal is that faculty grievance procedures may be administered by a council of peers. Faculty members having problems with the University may not be able to solve their problems among themselves. They need administrative assistance. In some cases, faculty members cannot provide the unbiased attitudes needed to correct situations involving other faculty members.

Some grievances can usually be handled by informally discussing them with the dean of a particular college, but there are many that absolutely require formal arbitration. Solving these grievances makes it necessary that an effective proposal be instituted. MSU will be unable to hire quality faculty if the method of handling faculty grievances is neither adequate nor appropriate.

Considering the length of time the administration and the Faculty Council have taken to come up with a grievance procedure — the current interim procedure was implemented in 1972 — one would think that an acceptable plan would have been introduced by now. University administrators should not be rushed into introducing an ineffective and poorly planned proposal (such as Winder's), but the University needs an adequate plan soon.

More planning gets results

Wednesday's ASMSU Student Board-sponsored rally at the Capitol protesting tuition increases was a farce! In short, it lacked even mere hints of sincerity, planning and support — only 150 people thought it was important enough of an issue to get riled up about. I wonder how many people were out there just trying to earn a dollar. If you did not already know, ASMSU offered the carrier of the best protest sign $50, and offered $100 to the group with the best sign or banner. I guess ASMSU realized that they could not stir up the apathetic students of MSU for a cause that affects all of them, so they had to offer economic incentives for people to attend the rally.

Nonetheless, only 150 students showed up to protest tuition hikes or to try to win some money. Whatever the incentive, I've seen more people lined up outside of Dooley's on a weeknight! But, hey, what is more important?

Again, I am repulsed by the use of money to attract protesters — the rally was like one paid for by a political candidate. The use of money, even for "prizes," stripped the movement of any sincerity of impact it might have had. The rally at the Capitol was enough to make a truly concerned student sick.

Would not the money for the prizes have been better spent on telegrams, postage for letters to legislators, or for bus fare for the people who did not want to (or could not) march to the Capitol? Perhaps it should have been used to take a few key people in the Legislature out to lunch.

The protesters chanted obscene slogans in response to the fact that Rep. Bob Carr did not show up for the rally. I for one, am certainly glad that he did not attend, because the majority of protesters acted like immature kids at a football game. This was no way to deal with state legislators. I have always thought that the best way to communicate with people is to do so on their level — not far, far below it.

By the way, what earthly good would it have done for Carr to show up? There isn't any pending legislation about tuition hikes or state aid to institutions of higher education.

This brings me to another point. Where in the hell was the Student Board when the University was discussing tuition rates and the Legislature was discussing appropriations for MSU? Who do the organizers of the rally think they are to dictate where elected officials should be? The schedule of speakers was thrown off by almost two hours because of poor planning. This prevented some scheduled speakers from speaking at all.

It was somewhat ironic (but fitting) that the protesters were forced to use the side door of the Capitol to protest near. It might have been more fitting for them to protest near the back door.

After the rally, a number of immature people went into the Capitol to chant and generally make a lot of noise. They brought a considerable amount of embarrassment to all students at MSU. Fortunately most of the people who occupy the Capitol were on their lunch break and did not hear the nonsense the students caused. The legislators that did hear them were certainly not thrilled or spurred to action; they were, at best, annoyed by the intrusion, which did little but to hinder the students' cause.

To the people that acted immaturely at the Capitol instead of attempting to visit state legislators, I would like to say "grow up." To the people that attended the rally with a genuine concern for tuition costs, I extend my congratulations and apologies for this criticism.

I hope that next time ASMSU plans a rally, the idea is thought about before it is acted on.

This is a time for self-examination

This letter is addressing all Iranian nationals either teaching or studying at MSU. I believe that all of you must do some serious self-analysis of your intentions and your future. This matter may have resolved itself by the time this letter is printed, but currently 60 or so Americans and members of the diplomatic corps are being held hostage and threatened with death by your compatriots in Iran. If these people are murdered, will you condone it? Does your fanatical hatred of the Shah Pahlavi condone mass murder? This is probably beside the point, but it is against the law in this country to threaten the President's life. Also, whether you want to admit it or not, you have replaced the shah with an insane cold-blooded killer who, in his 15 years of asylum in Paris, became totally detached from the modern world. Interestingly enough, do any Iranians here at MSU plan to go back to Iran? Would you be able to go back? You people are too Western oriented. You cannot go back. The destruction of the Bazaragan government proves and underlines this point. But the world is full of contradictions. Iran is burning, and you are studying chemistry or whatever and going to Dooley's at night.

Think about the questions I have asked.

Law possibilities not understood

I have some comments on your editorial regarding a law school at MSU. The possibility, considered in the past, did not "fall prey to lack of interest by University administrators." There were other more commanding reasons for not implementing the idea.

Some 15 years ago, when Howard Neville was provost, the Educational Policies Committee, at the administration's request, developed a proposal for a law school. It went with the University's annual budget request to the state. At that time, legislators from the Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo areas threw in counter-proposals for law schools in their respective communities. None of the three proposals carried because of the countervailing political powers. Shortly thereafter, Justice Thomas Brennan started Cooley Law School as a private venture to fill the Lansing void, thus pre-empting MSU's entry into the local law school market.

Regarding comparisons with U-M, your choice of veterinary medicine as a comparable unit is inappropriate. Our College of Veterinary Medicine occupies a monopoly position in Michigan, while there are several law schools. More appropriate for comparison would be some unit in the University where MSU and U-M both have programs, and in which MSU has matched or excelled U-M in spite of a half-century later start. Our Department of Accounting is one such unit; that's proof that MSU can match the excellence of U-M, in some disciplines. Hopefully, law could be one of those disciplines.

Please respect campus property

When two parties are at war, and one party destroys my property, I am automatically compelled to side with the party that respected my property and left it untouched.

I see structures on campus, structures that belong to all of us, that have been defaced or destroyed with anti-nuke slogans. The persons involved are obviously against nuclear power. I have yet to see pro-nuke slogans painted on buildings and bridges.

If the persons against nuclear power want any respect from me, my rights should not be infringed upon. If they have something to say, or a slogan to post, I suggest that they paint their slogans on wood or cardboard and quietly, calmly and neatly post these signs where I can read them.

After this has been done, I will see that they care about the respectability of the anti-nuclear movement and are serious in their campaign against nuclear power.

VIEWPOINT: FAMILIES

A special holiday to be remembered

By GARY T. PIATEK

Thanksgiving isn't as enjoyable for me as it used to be, and it's all because of an incident my brothers accused me of doing.

Being the youngest of three brothers made me the most accused person in my house. Everytime an ashtray got broken or the bathtub faucet was left running, my brothers, Bob and Larry, would say that I did it.

Mom ran a democratic household, so regardless of my protesting, I often got clobbered for something I didn't do. For years, in order to spare myself a stinging backside, I ran around trying to undo whatever my brothers, my partners in crime, did. The numbers and prices of broken ashtrays I replaced are astronomical. I had to get a job delivering newspapers just to keep up with Bob and Larry.

When Bob got too old to hang around the house breaking things, I was determined to get even. I became a quick denier. I became so quick that I would deny things before Mom even knew what I was talking about.

The moment she would return from shopping, and if something illegal had happened in her absence, I would meet her at the back door saying, "I didn't do it."

One time I did it and I could not deny that fact.

Every year around Thanksgiving Dad would go to the delicatessen, buy hog casings, stuff them with home-ground meat, and hang the sausage outside in the smokehouse so it would collect a smoky flavor. A smokehouse, for all you city people, is a square wooden shed set up on a foot high stack of bricks. Inside the shed, on the ground, is built a fire. The sausage is strung about four feet above the fire from wall to wall inside the shed. The smoke from the fire fills the shed, producing smoked sausage.

One particular year Dad got tired of me getting in the way in the house and told me to go watch the fire. This got boring after awhile, and I thought a bigger fire might make it more interesting. I threw another log on the fire. Nothing happened, so I threw a couple more logs on the fire. The fire didn't grow any larger, and, figuring the logs were wet, I went into the house to watch television.

About twenty minutes later Dad and my brothers joined in a chorus of "What did you do?"

I instinctively replied, "I didn't do anything," and chased them into the backyard to see flames engulfing the shed and threatening to spread to the neighbor's garage.

Quick wits and fast moves — neither of which I possessed — put out the fire. Even since then our Thanksgiving plates have lacked pieces of homemade sausage. Thanksgivings just aren't as tasty as they used to be.

Free America from shah's burden

I disagree with any decision not to return the shah to Iran. He is, by most accounts, responsible for many tortures and murders. Though he may have murdered in America's name, I don't feel a bit responsible. We don't owe the shah anything. We don't owe him any American lives or a third world war, but we do owe the Iranians justice. Our government calls the embassy takeover "blackmail," but it is kidnapping. It should be thought of as the Iranian's attempt to give us a physical incentive for remembering a moral imperative for world justice. We are not above our own laws on the world scene; let's not harbor this criminal!

Rape program

Women, on the other hand, are conditioned that they will lose the attention of men if they are too assertive in saying "no," she said.

"INSTEAD OF PLAYING games, men and women need to be honest and say what they like and what they don't like," Karelius-Schumacher said.

"I think men should do something about other men's attitudes towards women," Ayers said.

"I personally feel real hopeless to make any contribution against rape," Wasserman said. "It's hard for me to consciously identify with rape. I think of people who commit rape as very different than myself."

"Then you haven't heard any of the bull sessions in the dorms," said a female student.

"I'M REFERRING TO the attitude of men who talk about conquering women and getting them into bed," Ayers said.

"It's not my only concern to free women from the threat of rape. I'm also concerned about freeing myself (from the stigma of being regarded as a potential rapist because I am male) to have honest relationships with women. Right now I don't think women trust men."

Ayers suggested that men not give peer support to men with sexist attitudes.

A woman in the audience said that Dr. Eileen VanTassel, professor of natural science, has taught classes on sex differences and has said that college men have a very callous attitude concerning sex differences.

"She says she hears very hostile comments to the questions women raise concerning sex differences and that women are too trusting and open."

"Van Tassel says women need to have a much more skeptical attitude," she added.

"DOES THAT MEAN that I can never trust a man I meet at a party?" another woman said.

Karelius-Schumacher said when one feels uneasy in a social situation with someone, she should trust her gut feeling.

"Women are conditioned to believe that intuition is irrational, but intuition is natural and women should trust their feelings," Karelius-Schumacher said. "If a situation doesn't feel right, you know it's not right."

"The message is for women not to say 'I fear being raped,' but rather 'I'm aware that I can be raped and so I will take precautions,'" Rashid said.

The audience was shown the film "Rape Prevention: No Pat Answer," produced by Polly Pettit. The 15-minute film showed that rape is committed against young women, older women and children. The film suggested precautions and resistance techniques, but stressed that there is no pat formula to prevent rape.

"Rape: A Problem for All" was sponsored by Chi Omega and Tri-Delta sororities.

Campus fraternity reinstates charter

The MSU chapter Delta Upsilon will have its national chapter reinstated in a ceremony at 1:30 p.m. Saturday at St. John's Student Parish, 327 M.A.C. Ave.

W.A. Butler, the national executive director of Delta Upsilon, will be presenting the charter.

The chapter was folded in 1971, mostly due to Vietnam activism, chapter president Dale Trembley said. Students lost interest in college fraternities, he added.

The chapter was reorganized in 1976, Trembley said. But it wasn't until fall of 1979, that the fraternity held 50 members for one term, the requirement necessary to regain a national charter.

Delta Upsilon was the first national fraternity to make all of its rituals public, Trembley said. It is one of the few today to keep its rituals open.

The church ceremony will be followed by the raising of the fraternity's flag at 3:15 p.m. at Demonstration Hall.

An open house will be held from 3:30 to 5 p.m. at the fraternity house at 343 Albert St. Snacks and refreshments will be provided.

The ceremonies will end with a banquet at the Royal Scot of Lansing, 4722 W. Grand River Ave.

Benefit coffeehouse features local talent

The MSU Music Therapy Club will sponsor a benefit coffeehouse from 7 to midnight tonight in the main floor lounge of the Union.

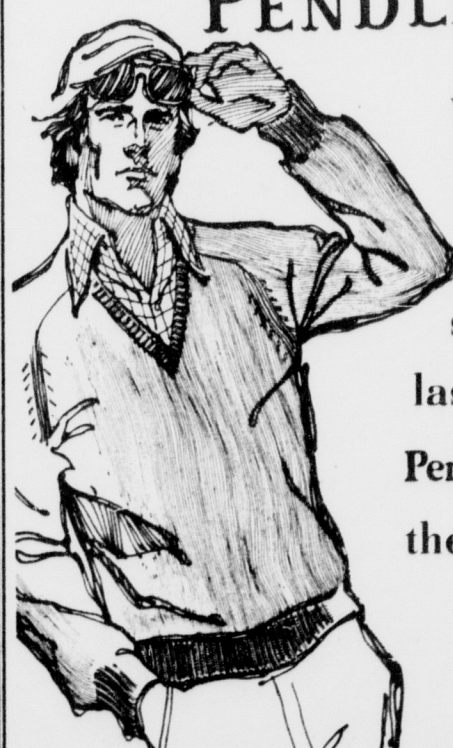

MSU music students and local artists will be featured in the event. The musical presentation will range from folk to bluegrass to pop to classical.

The better-known performers will include the MSU Chamber Music Choir, under the direction of music professor Charles Smith, and folk singer Sally Roger.

Walk-in performers will be welcomed. A donation of $1.50 per person will be asked at the door, and baked goods and coffee will be on sale during the event.

Proceeds from the coffeehouse will go toward funding a spring retreat for club members and a group of mentally impaired individuals.

Iggy hangs loose in Detroit

By JOHN NEILSON
State News Reviewer

Iggy Pop may have gotten new values when it comes to making records, but on stage he's still the same little twerp that was inventing punk rock long before the term was coined to describe it. Once an integral part of the "Detroit Rock" scene, Iggy had a homecoming of sorts Wednesday night when he played Masonic Auditorium.

Detroit, however, showed its true colors by only half-filling the hall, something that would have been unheard of had the "Dee-troit" star been Ted Nugent or Bob Seger. Detroit has been coasting on a dead reputation of being a rock 'n' roll town for years, only the truth has become painfully obvious lately. (No wonder Iggy lives in Berlin now.)

Backing Iggy on this tour is a band that might as well call itself the "Punk Rock All-Stars." On guitar was Brian James, who was a member of the original Damned and guitarist on what was technically the first single of the English punk movement, "New Rose." Bassist Glen Matlock was one of the original members of the Sex Pistols — the predecessor of the late Sid Vicious. Ivan Kral — who was on loan from the Patti Smith Group — played second guitar and keyboards, while the drums were handled by Klaus Kruger of the synthesizer band Tangerine Dream (who weren't exactly punks, but who's counting?).

It seemed incredibly appropriate that these seminal punk rockers were backing up one of the patron saints of the genre — a man who had explored most of the possibilities of the three-chord thrash while most of these rockers were still in high school. All poetic justice and irony aside, however, Iggy's latest band may well be the most sympathetic one he's worked with since the days of Raw Power.

"This ain't gonna be no freak show," the Ig announced upon taking the stage, dashing what hopes the audience might have had for an evening of blood, vomit and peanut butter. The fact that he is no longer totally depraved onstage does not mean that he has "mellowed," however. Iggy is still as charmingly obnoxious as ever, taunting the audience with undiluted venom at every opportunity — especially those whose resemblance to Farrah Fawcett did not seem accidental. ("You may think you're a model, but you're just dogfood to me!") During the performance he rendered several microphones useless at crucial points in the show by hurling them down on the stage, he spat out a glass of water on the first few rows (who had been pelting him with plastic cups all evening), and at one point he bodily picked up Ivan Kral off the stage. His onstage contortions have lessened somewhat with age, however, and fans of the "old" Iggy had to content themselves with watching him whip it out. Twice.

Musically the show contained songs from all of his albums except Kill City, plus a few unreleased tunes and some surprises. The latter group included a version of the Kinks' "You Really Got Me" and a bluesy rendition of an old Sinatra song, which featured a dynamite solo from Brian James. The fact that he played a musical cross-section of his entire career meant that his excellent new album New Values was not given the exposure it deserved (only the title track and "Five-Foot-One" were played), but this disappointment was alleviated somewhat by his great versions of songs like "China Girl," "Funtime," "Loose," and "Your Pretty Face Is Going To Hell." Ideally he should have also played some of his masterpieces like "Search and Destroy," "Lust For Life," "The Passenger" and "Gimme Danger," but then Iggy never was one to give the audience what they wanted. Instead of the aforementioned gems, he played several songs that were just vitriolic harangues set to three chords, but of course no Iggy show would be complete without at least a few of those.

Interspersed between the songs was Iggy's unique brand of homilies and homespun philosophy on topics ranging from television to dog food to his favorite topic, his sex life. He also gave witty introductions to each of the members of his band, and his introduction of the drummer is fairly representative of these ("This is Klaus. His daddy lost the war. My daddy won the war.") After completing his set Iggy waited for about ten minutes before coming back out for an encore, finally saying "I didn't want to do this, but I'm doing it for you!" Iggy, you're all heart!

Opening the show for Iggy were Detroit's own Coldcock (whom we missed due to a run-in with the twilight zone) and the very strange Skafish from East Chicago. Skafish's geek-rock was soundly booed at first by the partisan Iggy audience (so was Blondie when they opened for him in Detroit), but by the show's end their unrelenting weirdness had won them some admirers.

Iggy Pop

Skafish came across as a slightly more-demented version of Lansing's own Trainable, featuring a lead singer who appeared to have just undergone a lobotomy and a female vocalist who crawled around the stage in a prom dress. Their music was '60-ish new wave with an edge of Zappa-esque insanity, and they proved to be a fitting opener for the REAL Motor City Madman.

Pacino overshadows film's excesses

By MARY TINNEY
State News Reviewer

... and Justice For All (Columbia; at the Meridian 8) is a movie that you just can't help liking. Even though the bad guys are bad to the core, and the only good guy is by now a pretty standard movie character — the crumpled and incurably sincere friend of the people. Even though you know better, you'll have a hard time disliking this movie. Why? ... Because the bad guys lose in the end in a way that makes you want to cheer ... Because the movie comes up with some pretty shocking insights in spite of itself ... and mostly because Al Pacino in nothing short of terrific.

... and Justice For All deals with the American system of justice, or more appropriately, the American system of injustice. Indeed, this movie makes our judicial system look like a three-ring circus. We see a defendant actually eat evidence while his lawyer is flirting with a woman in the audience ... a judge shoot off a pistol to regain order as a defendant and a prosecuting attorney fight it out ... lawyers bargain with judges in the hallways ("What will you do for me if I cut the sentence down to 18 months?") ... and a strong of mistakes and misunderstandings send a man to jail for five years because of a broken headlight.

In the middle of it all is Kirkland (Pacino), a good-guy lawyer who cares about human beings and justice and looks so perpetually incredulous that you just want to hug him. There is no doubt that his character has become a cliché. It is the same character that Pacino popularized in Serpico and that actors from Richard Dreyfuss to Dustin Hoffman to Robert DeNiro have made an American movie favorite. This movie proves that, at least as Pacino portrays it, the character is still credible.

One of the movie's most interesting qualities is its sense of humor. It's actually a comedy with tragic overtones. The periods of intensity are always followed by, or interspersed with, elements of comic relief. The effect is very strange. One minute you think that you're seeing something very real and important. The next minute the movie seems more like a Monty Python version of "The Life of Clarence Darrow." This ambiguity is both good and bad. On the bad side it prevents the movie from making an acceptable definitive statement about the American judicial system. At the same time, the comic elements saves the movie from its excesses.

And the movie certainly tends to be excessive. The characters range from a suicidal judge (Jack Warden), who attempts to kill himself between every case he hears, to a lawyer who is obsessed with winning to the point of insanity.

But for all its excesses, ... and Justice For All has moments of tremendous power. When Kirkland's partner successfully defends a man who then kills two children the day after he's let out of jail, we are suddenly aware there are some things to be taken seriously in this movie. And when one of Kirkland's clients kills himself in jail because of a blunder on the part of one of Kirkland's lawyers friends, Pacino's expression of grief, anger and frustration is so intense that for a moment we forget that up until then the movie had not seemed all that serious about itself.

The acting is good for the most part. Jack Warden is hilarious as the suicidal judge and Marilyn Bergman is fine as Kirkland's girlfriend. John Forsythe does a good job as the judge that everyone hates, but his character is so unbelievably evil that it loses all credibility despite his talent. Best of all is Lee Strasberg as the grandfather who sent Kirkland through law school. Although the scenes of Kirkland visiting him in a rest home seem at first irrelevant, Kirkland's knowledge that the system his grandfather believed in is a farce is a poignant metaphor to the old man's creeping senility.

What we end up with is a movie that could have been great but is only OK. This seems to be due to an uncertainty of intention. Regardless of what it set out to be, ... and Justice For All is not a movie to be taken too seriously. With that in mind, go. Pacino is great!

Lizard's Underground (224 Abbott Road) will bring two excellent acts to East Lansing next week. On Monday, composer/performer Ellen McIlwaine brings her brash slide guitar blues, rock 'n' roll, and funk along with comedian Stuart Mitchell. On Tuesday, rock and jazz fusion artist Brian Auger appears with Search Party, including Michael Clark and Paul Jackson from Herbie Hancock's Headhunters Band with Ho Yung Kim on guitar.

Ellen McIlwaine is known as a "singer's singer", possessing a distinct vocal style that best highlights her original blues-based rock with country roots. McIlwaine is an admitted eccentric with her raw guitar playing, stream-of-consciousness ramblings, and her bluesy-sea singing. She has appeared with Blood, Sweat and Tears, Bruce Springsteen and Joni Mitchell (to name a few) and has recorded four albums as well. Appearing with her will be Gong Show comedian and musical humorist Stuart Mitchell. The cover is $2.50 at the door, which covers two sets beginning at 8:30 p.m.

English keyboardist Brian Auger, coming Tuesday, was really one of the first fusion artists. In 1964, obscured by modsters and Beatlemania, he won Melody Maker's award for Best New Artist and Best Keyboardist. Auger, (then with a different band), was the first rock-style band to play the Montreux and Berlin Jazz Festivals. He says of his style, "I knew in '64 that the jazz and classical fields were the only two fields that rock could draw from to make any kind of step forward . . . I always drew from the jazz side of things. It's just taken a bit longer for that side to happen." He will play with Search Party for two shows at 8 and 10:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 for each show.

VICTORY GIVES SPARTANS 6-5 RECORD

MSU, Iowa out for win in finale

By ADAM TEICHER
State News Sports Writer

On the surface, Saturday's season-ending MSU-University of Iowa football game looks like a battle between two teams just playing out the string.

However, a win in the 1 p.m. CST (2 p.m. in East Lansing) contest in Iowa City, Iowa, will give the victors a shot at the first division in the Big Ten. In MSU's case, a triumph over the Hawkeyes will give the Spartans a 6-5 record for the 1979 season. But a winning record and a first division finish won't make many Spartan fans happy compared with last season's Big Ten championship.

MSU has a two-game winning streak. Last week's 31-17 win over Minnesota was unusual in that the Spartans did not complete a pass and only attempted four throughout the game.

MSU COACH DARRYL ROGERS promises that won't happen again.

"That was a little different football game than we normally play," said the man who has been credited with bringing the pass back to the Big Ten. "It was our game plan to establish a running attack and we achieved our goal. But I don't think we'll do that too often. For us to be successful, I think we have to be more balanced."

While MSU is expected to throw a bit more Saturday, no one can predict what Iowa will do.

"They use some exotic formations," Rogers said. "They'll clear out the backfield and use five receivers and they even use the shotgun. Yet they still have the Big Ten's leading rusher."

Dennis Mosley is the conference's top ground gainer in all games and is second to University of Michigan's Butch Woolfolk in league games. In addition, the speedy Mosley ranks seventh in the nation in rushing and is among the leaders in all-purpose running (rushing, receiving, punt return and kickoff return yardage combined.)

THE 1979 VERSION of Dennis Mosley is different. A senior, Mosley had gained only 866 yards in his first three years at Iowa. But this season Mosley has run for 1,202 yards and is a pro prospect.

"I think Dennis Mosley has matured as a person as well as a football player," said first-year Iowa coach Hayden Fry. "I think our offensive style is more suited to his talents than the offense that was run before I was here."

Another reclamation project of Fry's is left-handed quarterback Phil Suss, who languished on the bench as a defensive back prior to Fry's arrival.

"Phil made some mistakes that hurt us badly last week against Ohio State (Iowa lost, 34-7), but he has been an asset to our team," Fry said. "He has turned out to be a pretty good runner, too."

Rogers is also impressed with the Iowa defense. "They played excellent defense at Ohio State," he said. The Hawkeyes turned the ball over 10 times in the loss. "Statistically speaking, I don't know if anyone has played Ohio State better."

MEANWHILE, ROGERS IS heartened by MSU's two-game winning streak. "I think we've made tremendous strides as a team in the last three weeks," he said. "We're not a bad football team, we just had a bad string," Rogers added, referring to the Spartans' five-game losing streak midway through the season. The losses ended any hope of Saturday's game being for the Big Ten championship.

MSU: Two Spartans rate high in NCAA statistics going into the final game. Derek Hughes, the Big Ten's leading kickoff returner, is second in that category behind Steve Nelson of Ball State University. Hughes has an average of 31.8 yards per return. Ray Stachowicz is sixth in the country in punting with a 44.5 average. Stachowicz leads the Big Ten as well.

Harriers go to nationals

By CHRIS HANSEN
State News Sports Writer

The MSU women's cross country team will culminate its successful season in the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women national cross country championships at Florida State University in Tallahassee, Saturday.

Cross country coach John Goodridge is confident of a top-ten team finish for his harriers.

"They've had a great season and now they are ready to run in the nationals," Goodridge said. Although the team is at its peak and ready to run its best, "its going to be an amazingly close meet," Goodridge said.

"THERE ARE ABOUT 15 teams that are well-balanced enough to make it real tight," Goodridge said.

The harriers will be facing teams such as North Carolina State University, featuring All-America Julie Shea. Both Shea and North Carolina State are undefeated this season.

Other teams promising to be tough Saturday are Iowa State and Purdue universities, and University of Wisconsin. Iowa State has lost only once in the last four years. That loss was to Wisconsin, which placed first in the regional championships just ahead of Purdue and MSU. Many West Coast teams are also expected to run strong.

"A lot of teams have the tendency to let up after the regionals, as they have already qualified for national competition. 'We haven't,' Goodridge said, noting that his training program is geared to an excellent performance at the nationals.

ALTHOUGH THERE IS an accent on national competition, senior Cynthia Wadsworth doesn't feel like this is the end. Due to injuries, this is only the second time in her college career that she has run in national competition.

"I feel like I'm just coming back," said Wadsworth, who plans to go on and run at the AAU Nationals this year.

Competing Spartan harriers will consist of Wadsworth, Lisa Berry, Kelly Spatz, Sue Richardson, Mary Ann Opaleski, Anne Pewe and Jill Washburn.

State News / Tony Dugal

MSU's Kelly Spatz, left, and Lisa Berry, will be among the top contenders when the women harriers compete in the AIAW cross country national championships.

LOOK TO IMPROVE 2-4 WCHA MARK

Icers on the road at Notre Dame

By JEFF HITTNER
State News Sports Writer

MSU hockey coach Ron Mason said before this season began that he expected victories to be at a premium for his team during the first half of the WCHA schedule.

After all, his club was faced with the grueling task of playing seven of its first 12 league games on the road. As if that alone wasn't enough, all six opponents were considered solid choices to make the league playoffs.

But the Spartans have held their own, thank you, and expect to add at least one more win to their 2-4 WCHA mark and 3-5 overall record when they meet the University of Notre Dame this weekend.

Touring their second WCHA town in as many weekends, the Spartans face the Fighting Irish tonight and Saturday in Notre Dame's Athletic and Convocation Center.

MSU ENTERS the series after gaining a split of its two-game set with Michigan Tech last weekend. Mason said the win at Tech has given his club confidence going into tonight's game.

"Had we not gotten a win at Tech," Mason said, "it would be difficult for us to win at Notre Dame."

This weekend's series will match two teams that have proficient offenses but inconsis-

Their (Notre Dame's) ice arena has a different type of environment. The rink is off domed center. It's not nearly the home advantage for them like Tech's was for them.

—MSU Coach Ron Mason

tent defenses.

The Spartans had put together three fine defensive games in a row until last Saturday's game at Michigan Tech. But MSU has yet to show the first game, the Irish had to outscore them 11-9 to take the second contest.

Although the defensive-minded Mason would like to think otherwise, it could well be the offenses that steal the show this weekend.

CENTER LEO LYNETT gives MSU the second leading scorer in the WCHA with 16 points on nine goals and seven assists. In all games, he has 11 goals and 10 assists for 21 points.

Lynett is also the only player in the league with two hat tricks, including one in the Spartans' 5-4 win over Michigan Tech last Friday.

Right wing Russ Welch is tied with three other players as the WCHA's third leading scorer with 14 points. He has eight goals and six assists in league play with additional assists in the rest of games.

MSU's other top scorers this season have been defenseman Ted Huesing with 14 points on five goals and nine assists; right wing Mark Hamway with three goals and 10 assists for 13 points; and left wing Mike Stoltzner with three goals and seven assists for 10 points.

BUT NOTRE DAME is not without its own offensive stars. Junior Kevin Humphreys and senior captain Greg Meredith top the Notre Dame squad in league scoring with 12 points each from their wing positions.

When the Irish are playing a good defensive game, it's usually because of the efforts of junior Jeff Brownschilde and senior John Friedmann.

SOPHOMORE DAVE LAURION, Notre Dame's starting goaltender for most of last season, has been splitting duty with freshman Bob McNamara.

Head coach Charles "Lefty" Smith's 12th Notre Dame team is 3-3 in the WCHA and 4-3 overall.

The Irish defeated MSU in three of the four meetings last season, including twice at Notre Dame.

"Their ice arena has a different type of environment," Mason said. "The rink is off to the side of domed center. It's not nearly the home ice advantage for them like Tech's was for them."

SISTERS MEET

Tankers face Broncos

Friday may be a big day for freshman Suzie Kolon as the MSU women's swimming team travels to Kalamazoo for a 7:30 p.m. dual match with Western Michigan University.

Kolon, a butterfly and backstroke swimmer for the Spartans, may get to compete against sister Carol, a WMU junior, in the 500 yard freestyle event. The Kolons are sisters of Kathy Kolon, who was on the MSU team last season.

"Western is a real inexperienced team except for Carol," said MSU coach Jennifer Parks. "I think she'll probably be the outstanding swimmer on their team."

Most of MSU's swimmers will be competing in off events against WMU, which under new coach Pete Lindsey, is striving to revive a program that has been struggling for the past two years.

"What we're trying to do is give our swimmers a little bit more experience," Parks said. "Our divers also, will be able to get as much experience as possible. We feel that this is a meet in which we can try this."

For the 12th consecutive year, MSU's divers are under the direction of coach John Narey.

Grapplers open with MSU Invite

By BILL TEMPLETON
State News Sports Writer

The MSU wrestling team opens its season tonight as it hosts the third annual Spartan Invitational, a "very unique tournament," according to head coach Grady Peninger.

Peninger, starting his 20th year at the Spartan helm, noted that the tournament is dedicated to former football coach and athletic director Clarence L. "Biggie" Munn.

Winners in all ten weight classes will be presented with trophies shaped from the original mold of the famed Spartan mascot "Sparty".

EIGHT TEAMS WILL compete for top honors in the weekend tourney, with Northern Michigan University ranking as the favorite.

"We're greatly hampered at this time because four of our top 10 wrestlers are injured right now," Peninger said. "NMU will probably have the toughest team; otherwise we would."

Other teams in the tournament will be Central Michigan and Western Michigan universities, along with the University of Notre Dame, Grand Valley State College and Grand Rapids Junior College.

For the first time, the Spartans will have two teams in the event, a green and a white.

THE GREEN SQUAD will feature Tony Uhlman at 118 pounds, Chuck Joseph at 126 pounds, Gary Crump by virtue of a playoff win over Shawn White, will compete at 134 pounds.

Jeff Therrian will see action at 142 pounds, with David Rodriguez scheduled to wrestle at 150 pounds, Ron Sobel will wrestle at 158, while Mike Varnette will compete at 167 pounds.

Rounding out the green team will be Jim Ellis at 177 pounds, Mark Severn at 190 pounds and veteran Shawn Whitecomb in the heavyweight division.

Peninger said all of the injuries to his top wrestlers will be subsided soon, none are serious.

EACH COMPETITOR will wrestle at least three times in this weekend's event, with matches slated for six minutes each.

Action gets underway at 8 tonight giving every competitor a chance to wrestle once before the tournament picks up again at noon Saturday.

The tournament is sponsored by the Takedown Club of Lansing, with all proceeds from the tournament going to the club.

Admission to the two-day event will be $1 for students and $2 for adults.

The Fresh Fish Variety Show.

ALWAYS AN IN-SEASON SHOW OF FRESH FISH. AND THAT'S NO SONG AND DANCE.

Talk about "fresh"! Our fish are so fresh we can't list them on the menu. The selection changes all the time. We take a look at the day's catch, then offer you the best. Sole, swordfish, lake trout, flounder, scrod and ocean perch are among favorites. Light and flaky, just picked from the sea. And if that doesn't bring the house down, try our new menu of beef and seafood favorites. Something for every taste. Something for every pocketbook. It's quite a show. So don't miss it.

Live entertainment through Sunday evenings.

IM playoffs end as fall season closes

By CHRIS HANSEN
State News Sports Writer

Now that the Michigan climate is turning to snow and near arctic temperatures, the fall term IM sports are finishing playoff games.

With the exception of men's independent A football and the women's swimming championship both which took place Thursday night and the co-rec volleyball playoffs, Sunday, all fall IM playoffs have been finished.

In the men's residence hall championship flight, Akarpous, of Akers Hall, beat Halfway House from Wilson Hall, 25-12, to win the championship flight first place honors for the second consecutive year.

ALTHOUGH AKARPOUS HAS earned the right to be mentioned for its performance, it seems a bit unfair to slant all the other teams that worked just as hard to compete in IM football.

Teams like Badlands, Bailey Hall champions, and Arnimal, another team from Brody Complex, which was 7-1 this season, also deserve mention. Jai Hai, from Emmons Hall, which lost to Akers Akhilles, 33-0, has had strong teams for the last four years.

In flight three, Wolfpac, from Wonders Hall, defeated the Buschackers of Wilson Hall, 34-12. And in flight four, Hendrix, from Holmes Hall, narrowly beat Wonders' Two High, 21-7.

In the fraternity green playoffs, Delta Chi beat Lambda Chi Alpha, 38-20. Sigma Nu, in its first year in the green league, played tough ball this season, beating Phi Delta Theta in the early playoffs, before losing to Delta Chi in the quarter finals. Last year Sigma Nu competed in the white league, which is for fraternities with small membership.

THIS IS JUST a small cross section of the IM teams, all of which invest a lot of time and effort both in preparation and effort during the games.

Although there seems to be a heavy accent on winning from team members, one must keep in mind the purpose of IM athletics. "We offer IM athletics for both social and recreational fulfillment," said IM Assistant Director Sally Belloli. "Healthy, rather than fierce competition is stressed by MSU IM staff."

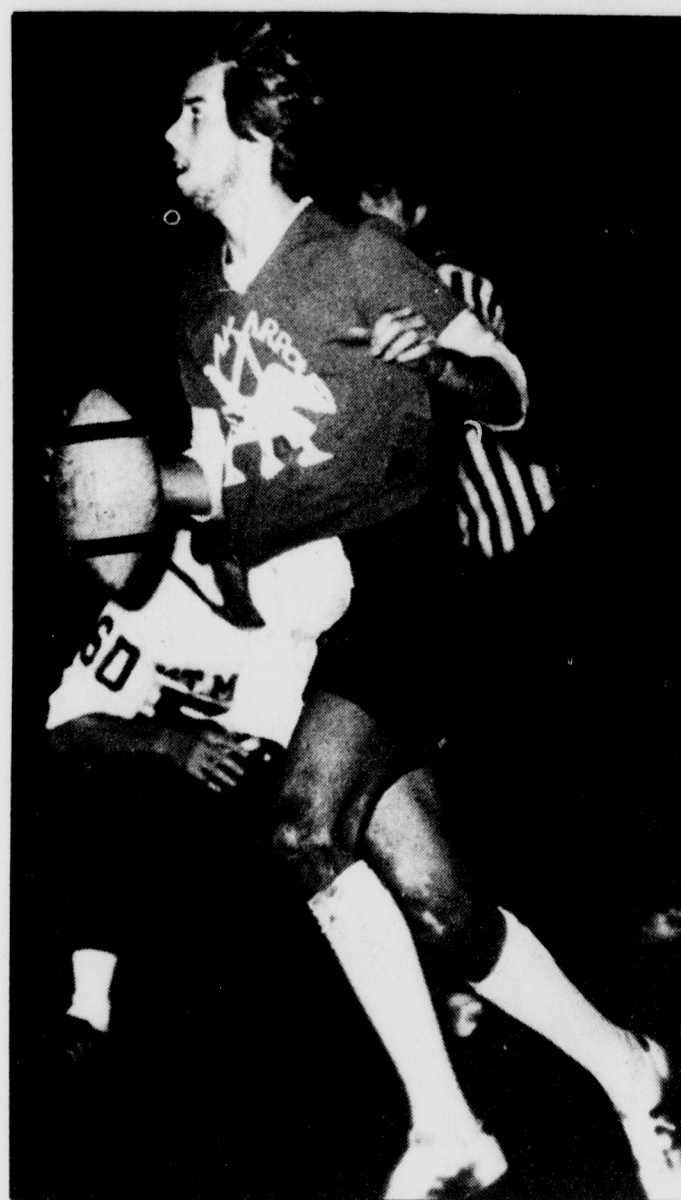

In women's IM football, the independent league's Banana Heads beat the Poached Eggs, 13-0. In the sorority league, Alpha Zeta Dynasty defeated the Pi Phi Pirates, 19-0. In the residence hall women's football league, Aklipse, sister floor of Akarpous, beat the Voodoo, 25-0.

WOMEN'S IM VOLLEYBALL is close to ending another season. In the sorority league, the women of Sigma Kappa edged Zeta Tau Alpha's spikers, 15-8, 15-12. The Innates beat Alpha Gamma Wanga in the individual league, 15-6, 15-13.

Men's volleyball action saw S and S defeat Comparative Advantage, 15-6, 15-6.

Another IM league that is relatively new at MSU is the co-rec volleyball league. These teams are in the second year of competition and promise to be popular in following seasons.

Now that the fall IM season is drawing to a close, teams for the winter IM sports will be forming soon. Sports include hockey, basketball, swimming, handball, racket sports and swimming.

Gymnasts travel to OSU tourney

By BILL TEMPLETON
State News Sports Writer

After competing as individuals in Wisconsin last weekend, the MSU men's gymnastics team will travel as a unit to the Buckeye Invitational for a two-day weekend tournament in Columbus, Ohio.

Three teams besides MSU will compete in the event including Ohio State, Ball State and Indiana universities.

Team championships will be decided tonight with the top ten finishers from each preliminary event meeting Saturday night to determine individual champions.

The Spartans are led by junior Marvin Gibbs in all-around competition, though Gibbs is strongly backed by four others including senior Dan Miller.

"Miller will be limited in this meet because of a dislocated finger," MSU head coach George Szypula said.

In the floor exercise, senior captain Charlie Jenkins is a standout performer, with freshman Pete Roberts "capable of challenging him," according to Szypula.

Senior Hubert Streep is MSU's key man in the pommel horse, while senior Tom Tomkow excels for the Spartans on the rings.

Also competing on the rings is freshman Bart Acino, called the best of the all-around performers on the rings, by Szypula.

Roberts, who earned a rating of 9.8 in the vault one week ago, will again lead MSU in this event along with Jenkins.

Jenkins will also be counted on heavily in the parallel bars, an event, coupled with the floor exercise, which Szypula believes are the Spartans strong points.

Rounding out the events is high bar competition, where freshman Pedro Sanchez excels. A note on the high bar is that sophomore Rich Lacata, a star from last year's squad, has looked good recently in the event and should challenge Sanchez.

"Last weekend's tournament didn't mean too much," Szypula said, "but this weekend counts. It's still early, but it's important to us to look good this weekend."

Szypula said the Buckeyes have a potentially top-ten team nationally and that Ball State could also be a tough team.

"I think we can pull an upset in this tournament," Szypula said. "It's gonna be close."

U-M'S CANHAM WANTS HIS WISH

Northern bowl game in making?

ANN ARBOR (UPI) — The Rose Bowl, the Orange Bowl, the Cotton Bowl, the Sugar Bowl — and the Polar Bowl?

A major bowl game — the first in the frigid North — will be a reality within a season or two if Athletic Director Don Canham of Michigan gets his wish.

"There's a lot that has to happen," Canham cautioned Wednesday when outlining a plan that could pair two nationally known teams, such as the Big Eight and Big Ten runners-up or perhaps Notre Dame, in an indoor practice facility ready at Michigan for next season.

The promotion-minded Michigan money man said Wednesday he would like to get the Pontiac Silverdome to stage the first Northern college winter bowl game. He hopes to have an indoor practice facility ready at Michigan for next season.

"We've got to get it approved by the events committee of the NCAA, we've got to find the right dates, we've got to dovetail with the Detroit Lions' playoff possibilities," Canham said.

"At the present time, it's just in the thinking stage," said Canham, a member of the NCAA TV steering committee who believes he would have no trouble selling a game such as Oklahoma-Michigan to national television.

"But we finally have a chance to do it and we're going after it."

The Lions already play December games inside the frost-free 80,000 seat Silverdome and although the Detroit Pistons have had heating problems, a chill is not that much of a problem for football.

Bowling tournament

The MSU women's bowling team is sponsoring a singles no-tap tournament at the Union Lanes, 6:30 p.m. Tuesday Nov. 20.

No-tap means any nine pin count on the first ball is considered a strike. Each bowler will bowl three games and total pinfall will determine the winners.

Entry fee is $4 per bowler and any full-time student may enter. One out of five entries is guaranteed to win. First place is a turkey valued at $20.

Sign-up will take place all day at the Union lanes.

'Luckless' Irish needs new home

By ROXINNE ERVASTI
Associated Press Writer

BARROW, Alaska — After 13 years in captivity for the advancement of science, Irish the polar bear has been given an eviction notice.

He can't return to the wild, and it looks as if finding more civilized lodging will be difficult.

Irish's home has been the Naval Arctic Research Laboratory on the coast of the Arctic Ocean since he and a sister were brought here as orphaned 8-month-old cubs by Eskimo hunters. The sister has since died.

The federal government is phasing out the 32-year-old arctic facility here on Alaska's north shore, well above the Arctic Circle.

NO PROBLEMS ARE expected in finding zoo homes for most of the other 100 arctic animals kept at the laboratory. But Irish, on the downhill side of life and luckless with the ladies, is a different story.

"Irish is 13-and-one-half years old, and he's not been with a female with the exception of three tries, and they took unkindly to him, so he cowered in a corner and whined," says Gary Laursen, assistant science director of the lab.

"So, he can't be classified as a breeding male. And zoos, because of their financial situation, like to maintain breeding stock," Laursen said. "He's got two heavy strikes against him."

Scientists have been fiddling with Irish all these years, using him as a model for designing tracking and temperature transmitters now used to monitor his wild colleagues and grizzly bears. His diet has been purposefully varied and his blood and tissue scrutinized for understanding the biology of arctic mammals — and even arctic humans.

"IRISH HAS LIVED a very useful research life," says Laursen. "He's extremely healthy and would no doubt live for some time" — up to 15 more years.

Irish's size — 995 pounds — is another logistical strike against him, says Laursen. "We'd probably have to fly him out in a special cage in a C-130. It would cost something, for sure, but it's not a feat that can't be handled."

Irish probably has a home for another 10 months, Laursen said. But not many responses have come in from zoos where inquiries have been made in Irish's behalf, and those received are not encouraging.

Medical technicians Beverly Barrett and Steven Carls are among 29 medical technicians who have been on strike against the Lansing chapter of the American Red Cross since Monday. The employees are disputing contract terms concerning their salaries.

NO AREA BLOOD SHORTAGES

Medical technicians strike

Although American Red Cross medical technicians are striking in Lansing and Muskegon to protest low wages and inequities in pay scales, there is no impending blood shortage.

The lack of employees has cut blood collections in half, said Jan Wettaw, Red Cross director of public relations, but blood is being supplied by the Detroit and Flint Red Cross Regional Centers. No shortage of blood exists in area hospitals.

Twenty-nine Lansing members and six Muskegon members of the office of Professional Employees Union, Local 459, walked out at 6:30 p.m. Monday after they were unable to obtain a contract.

The group voted for union representation in March and has been bargaining since August for a contract, said Neal Wilensky, local union representative.

The technicians are dissatisfied with a nine-percent pay increase proposed by the Red Cross, Wilensky said, because they believe their salaries are too low to benefit by percentage increases.

"College educated medical technicians make a starting salary of $9,700 a year," Wilensky said. "Nurses with the same amount of education start at $15,000."

To correct inequities in the pay scale, Wilensky said, the group wants a step scale system which would automatically increase a technician's salary every year.

In general, a technician's job is to process, categorize and type blood.

Other unions at the Red Cross, the Michigan Nursing Association and the Teamsters, are honoring the picket line, Wilensky said.

Contest entrant reveals more

LONDON (AP) — Venezuela's Miss World entry, 18-year-old Tatiana Capote Abdel, popped out of her scanty one-piece swimsuit today at a preview of tonight's final judging, sending photographers scrambling for the best angle.

Veteran organizer Eric Morley hastily adjusted the swimsuit on the 35-23-35 woman and told reporters in a serious tone "I had to use both hands to get things covered up quickly."

The British Broadcasting Corp. said a 24-hour strike by 40 sound workers involved in a staff dispute forced cancellation of plans to televise tonight's final performance. The BBC had estimated 300 million persons around the world would have watched the broadcast.

The 70 entrants will parade in national dress, evening dress and then swim suits before a panel of judges. The show costs $1.05 million to stage and tickets cost up to $105.

The winner reigns for one year, gets a $10,500 prize and can expect to earn another $105,000 in modeling and personal appearances.

The favorites this time are British entry Carolyn Seward, 18, a blue-eyed blonde from Devon, Miss Bermuda, 21-year-old Gina Swainson, who finished second this year in the Miss Universe pageant and Miss Honduras, Gina Maria Weidner, 18.

The U.S. entry is brunette Carter Wilson, a New York model from the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia.

Newspapers may promote city plan

By ELLA CHOINSKI
State News Staff Writer

East Lansing's Comprehensive Plan may be promoted through a newspaper to generate public feedback, if further research proves it practical, the Planning Commission agreed Wednesday.

The newspaper would condense the information of four reports, called scenarios, into attractive, attention-getting articles on the Comprehensive Plan, City Planner Robert Owen said.

These scenarios are condensed reports of information dealing with the future comprehensive planning of East Lansing.

Since the summer of 1978, the city has been in the process of updating, revising and overhauling its existing Comprehensive Plan, which was adopted in 1967.

THE PLAN IS intended to outline the future objectives of East Lansing and identify policies to achieve them.

As part of the city's efforts to revise the plan, eight subcommittees, which included citizens and planning commission members, formed to research different concerns of the city.

These concerns include transportation, energy, housing, land use, recreation, public facilities, environmental quality and commercial development.

In size and format, the promotional newspaper would be comparable to the MSU News-Bulletin, Owen said.

Furthermore, a series of questions would be included in the paper to allow citizens to criticize the plan, he said.

OWEN FAVORED THE newspaper approach over the traditional method of mailing out reports to citizens and then scheduling public meetings to get feedback.

He said citizens would be more likely to provide feedback through the newspaper than through the extensive scenario reports.

Commission members were most concerned about distributing the reports to all citizens.

"We have to take time and expense to get it on everyone's doorstep," commissioner Ed Church said.

"We need to give every citizen the chance to contribute," commissioner Brenda Turner said.

A mock newspaper is scheduled to be presented at the commission's committee of the whole meeting next month, Owen said.

IF APPROVED BY the Planning Commission, the newspaper would be mailed to citizens in early January, he said.

After public input is received and further adjustments are made, the Comprehensive Plan

The tree was planted 20 years ago, on Columbus Day, by City Councilmember Alfred Velluci, who wanted to demonstrate his displeasure with an article in the Harvard Lampoon, the student humor magazine, took exception.

The article said America was discovered by Leif Ericson, a Norwegian; and Velluci, being very proud of his Italian heritage, took exception.

will be submitted to City Council for action, Owen said.

Daniel C. Chappelle has replaced Ralph Monsma as official chairperson of the Planning Commission. Monsma was elected to City Council last week.

The commission also voted to promote commission member Church to vice-chairperson.

The commission now has two vacancies caused by the resignations of Monsma and Karen Schrock, which must be filled by City Council. Applications for these positions are being accepted at City Hall, 410 Abbott Road.

'DUKE' FANS WARNED

Memorial medals are worth little

By MELANIE J. KOTOWICZ
State News Staff Writer

To his millions of fans, John Wayne may be part of a "golden" era, but to the American Treasury Mint, the cowboy is only bronze.

A few months ago, Congress authorized the U.S. Mint to make a gold medal inscribed with the bust of John Wayne to be presented to his family, said Tom Ziebarth, senior attorney of the Consumer Protection Division of the Postal Service Law Department.

Congress also authorized the mint to make bronze copies of the medal to be sold to the public at costs of $1 for one-inch medals and $8 for three-inch medals, he said.

The American Mint, a private company in Philadelphia, ordered thousands of the bronze John Wayne memorial medals from the U.S. Mint, with plans of electroplating the medals and selling them at profit.

"That's the great American way, as long as they don't confuse the public into thinking they're buying something of value when they're not," Ziebarth said.

But the American Treasury Mint alluded in its advertisements to being connected with the U.S. Mint, that the medals would be valuable because they were part of a limited first edition, and that they would be delivered in uncirculated mint conditions, Ziebarth said.

The advertising also suggested that the gold plating would increase the value of the medal, he said.

The Postal Service Consumer Protection Division in Washington filed a complaint against the firm, charging it with false advertisement.

The division, which is like a miniature Federal Trade Commission within the Postal Service, said the company's advertising implied that the gold-plated medals would increase in value because of skyrocketing gold prices, Ziebarth said.

But the bronze-based medals, which were to be sold at $10 each, only had about 15 cents worth of gold on them, he said.

"It's like if someone took 50-cent pieces and electroplated them; they'd be very pretty but not worth any more," Ziebarth said.

As to the number of medals available, the U.S. Mint will stamp out as many medals as the public demands, and they will be obtainable for years to come, he said.

There is no limited first edition, he said, because this edition of the medal is the only edition.

When the American Treasury Mint learned that it was being investigated, it came forward to make an "amicable settlement" with the Postal Service Consumer Protection Division, Ziebarth said.

The company consented to sign an agreement specifying that all future advertisements would state that the gold medal is actually bronze, and that the company is not affiliated with the U.S. Mint or any other government agency.

The company also agreed to stop advertising the medal as of a limited first edition, or claiming its value would greatly increase because of the rising price of gold.

RHA contributes to video projector

By JIM MITZELFELD

A bill to partially fund a video beam projector and TV screen for the McDonel Hall Grill was passed by the Residence Hall Association Wednesday, making it the first ever to be owned by a residence hall at MSU.

The bill passed by a roll call vote of 18-5.

Fee Hall representative Sherry Moody introduced the bill which allows the RHA Movie Program to contribute up to $2,000 towards the purchase.

Both McDonel Hall student government and management, who came to the RHA Movie Program with the proposal, will contribute $1,000 towards the purchase. The two will co-own the unit and split any repair costs.

The type of large TV that will be purchased has not been decided. The McDonel Grill is considering a $3,500 Advent model or a $4,000 Sony unit.

CASE HALL REPRESENTATIVE Dan McKean who voted against the bill said he felt some general guidelines for the funding of individual residence hall video units should be set up, since other complexes may soon be asking for funds for their own large TV.

"When we are handing out this kind of money we need precedents and guidelines set up," he said.

"McDonel Hall is a trial dorm, if Akers wanted one right now we wouldn't be able to help them out," Moody said.

There was some discussion of the space-use policies of some residence halls, which prohibit any group from soliciting funds from students waiting in meal lines without prior approval of the hall's student government.

"University policy exists to prevent students from being continually harassed. We seem to attract some real shyder groups," said Jim Wall, residence hall programming office representative.

"The residence hall governments shouldn't challenge the cause of the individual group, but instead look at their plans for how they will solicit," he added.

"I feel we should discourage solicitation but allow the dispersal of information," said Tom Mannisto, Holmes Hall representative.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

The Committee on Public Policy Studies is a formal academic unit of The University of Chicago offering a two year master's degree program* which focuses on preparation of students for a wide variety of professional careers. Major components of the program include Analytic Courses in Economics, Political Science, and Statistics; a range of Applications Courses offered by the Committee and the other departments or professional schools of the University; and a series of Policy Seminars devoted to the scholarly, interdisciplinary investigation of specific public policy issues.

The Committee does not automatically assume that government solutions are the preferred solutions to all public policy problems. Its program presupposes a role for the private sector as well as the public sector in solving public policy problems. The Committee further assumes that public policy leadership requires an understanding of both arenas and of the complex economic and social framework within which public policy operates.

The Committee welcomes applications from students in the social sciences, the humanities, and the natural sciences.

*The Committee offers a One Year Master's Degree Program to selected, advanced graduate students from various institutions. Such students are eligible for a flexible, elective-oriented program of study.

Before you graduate from college! Because now, you can combine service in the Army Reserve or National Guard with Army ROTC. It's called the Simultaneous Membership Program (SMP). And, depending on your academic year when you enter, SMP can help you earn over $6,500.

Here's how it works. If you qualify and a vacancy is available, you become a member of an Army Reserve or National Guard unit as an officer trainee and, at the same time, enroll in the Army ROTC advanced course at your college. Your Reserve or Guard membership will pay you at the minimum level of Sergeant E-5, and you'll receive $100 a month during the regular school year as an Army ROTC advanced course cadet.

At the end of your second year of advanced ROTC, you'll be commissioned a second lieutenant and, assuming there's a vacancy, serve with a Guard or Reserve unit while you complete the requirements for your college degree. Upon graduation, you may continue service with a Guard or Reserve unit while pursuing your civilian career, or you can, if you prefer, compete for active duty as an Army officer.

So if you'd like to earn over $6,500 while you're still in college, get into SMP. Because SMP can help you do it. You can bank on it!

Patrons of Zak's Bakery tempted by variety of Lebanese delicacies

By ELYSE GOLDIN
State News Staff Writer

If you happen to be standing in a supermarket line next to a woman with an entire lamb in her basket, don't bother asking her what it is for.

Chances are that she won't tell you anyway — at least not if she is Vera Zacharia.

Local grocers know Vera. She is most likely the only shopper who regularly purchases an entire lamb.

For her, the meat has to be fresh, with each piece being as young and tasty as the next. That's why she special orders the whole lamb.

She refuses to use less than the best ingredients in preparing one of her family's secret Lebanese recipes for Zak's Bakery of East Lansing. As she sees it, she wants to please the customers and be proud of her creations.

VERA AND HUSBAND Rohi (he prefers to be called Zak) are the owners of Zak's Bakery, 1312 Michigan Ave. It is the only authentic Lebanese restaurant in East Lansing.

A year and a half ago, the couple left Beirut, Lebanon, and brought a touch of the Middle East with them to East Lansing, where two of their children are MSU students.

Aside from the usual culture shock a foreigner experiences, Zak said it has taken him a while to get used to his new business.

In Lebanon, Zak was the funding manager of Middle Eastern Airlines Co., the largest airlines of that area.

"I DON'T KNOW how I got into this business," Zak said, "but I am glad I made the change. I enjoy meeting people here very much."

"I have never learned how to cook, but I do know how to eat and what tastes good," he said.

Although Vera never worked in Lebanon, she was the leader of a gourmet cooking club there and used to invent her own secret recipes.

More so than Zak, she was a natural for the restaurant business. Her original recipes and Middle Eastern hospitality has made Zak's Bakery a home-away-from-home for many.

FROM THE MOMENT people open the door to enter Zak's they know they are welcome.

The exotic aroma of spices and mesmerizing sound of Arabic music nearly draws them into the restaurant.

Zak, a stout 55-year-old man, greets customers, while Vera bakes another batch of pita bread.

First comes the smile, and then with a deep but warm and accented voice — the type a favorite uncle might have.

Vera comes running up shortly afterwards, and certainly before Zak has time to say more than "Hello."

Appropriately, she resembles a favorite aunt.

Wearing a brightly colored floral apron and a spray of flour in her hair, it is evident that baking has become an intrinsic part of her life.

TOGETHER THEY COMPETE for the customer's attention — each explaining their favorite dish on the menu.

Once the decision has been made, one of them returns to the cooking area to prepare the food, while the other stays up front keeping the guest company.

While waiting for the order, both the host and guest learn a little bit about each other, with jokes and smiles passing over the counter until the order is ready.

Even after the bill has been paid and the good-byes have been said, the conversation continued. Lovingly, Vera yells out from the back, "Zip up your jacket, it's cold outside."

THE CUSTOMER IS of the utmost importance to Vera and Zak, and it shows in every facet of their business.

Each order is carefully prepared while the customer waits.

It may be a few minutes before receiving the food, but most agree that the product is well worth the wait.

"It's difficult for us to prepare everything in front of the customer, but that is part of the secret to our food. If somebody is willing to wait only a few minutes, the customer can eat something hot, fresh and delicious," Vera said.

"The most important part of our recipes is the spices," Vera said.

With the exclusion of meat and vegetables, all ingredients are sent from New York and other parts of the world.

The most popular item on the menu is falafel, a combination of ground beans, spices and vegetables, deep fried and placed with salad inside pita bread.

ANOTHER FAVORITE IS Kibbeh, layers of ground meat with cracked wheat and spices, stuffed into pita bread with onions, pine nuts and spices. Baklavah and other high calorie favorites are available to tease any sweet tooth.

For a little over $1, a hungry stomach can be filled and content.

Zak said that most newcomers to the restaurant first try item No. 1 on the list. The next time they order number two, then three, then four until they've tried everything.

"They usually come back," he said.

Zak said that once the majority of his customers were homesick Mid-Easterners, but now most are American students, many tasting Lebanese food for the first time.

Zak's Bakery is open Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Rohi Zacharia and his wife, Vera, owners and operators of Zak's Bakery, appear satisfied with their latest batch of pita bread, fresh from the oven.

Debate over engineering job market continues

"They don't just train them (engineers) to go work with a drafting board," Shingelton said. The engineer is a more totally prepared person, he added.

He added that many major corporations are hiring engineers as management level employees. Shingelton said these jobs used to be occupied by liberal arts majors.

"COMPANIES ARE PUTTING engineers in top level management positions because they are good thinkers and not just good mechanics," Shingelton said.

The demand for engineers remains high, and there has been talk concerning a decrease in the demand for engineers but it has not happened within the last decade, he said.

Shingelton said he believes the demand is going to hold up. He added that the market for mechanical engineers, electrical engineers, chemical engineers and computer scientists remains high.

Mechanical engineers headed the list as the most sought after discipline, followed by electrical engineers. The list also showed an increase in demand for computer science majors.

Although mechanical engineers were the most sought after of engineering disciplines at MSU, chemical engineers received a monthly starting salary of $1,635.

JOHN KEMPER, DEAN of the college of engineering at the University of California at Davis, reiterated Shingelton's figures.

Kemper said last year more than 400 employees came to the U-C at Davis and 70 percent asked to interview engineers or technical people.

The market for new graduating engineers is "most intense," said Kemper. The lack of engineers is a nationwide problem.

But Robert J. Kuntz, executive director of the California Society of Professional Engineers said there is a surplus of engineers in the United States.

Kuntz said the enrollment of engineering schools is overwhelming.

More than 300,000 students are enrolled, he said. This is an increase of about 30 percent over previous years, he added.

"If the numbers are true we will see an oversupply of engineers," Kuntz said.

But Kemper and Lawrence Von Tersch, dean of MSU's college of engineering, disagreed with Kuntz.

Von Tersch said there "just aren't enough people" right now. He said the use of aliens could mean an increased need for engineers.

If there is a surplus of engineers "you can't tell it here (U-C at Davis)," Kemper said. "Ninety percent to 98 percent of the engineers, for the last 18 years, know what they are going to do before commencement," Kemper said.

"They either have a job or they are going to grad school."

Pumped storage power

providing educational opportunities for students, he said.

Training students has been a good side benefit of the studies so far, he added.

"THERE HAVE BEEN a lot of students who have been touched by the project," Liston said. "They were able to get experience they weren't able to get elsewhere."

The facility, which has been built in Ludington, has apparently been a good place to learn, too.

So far, about 45 undergraduates and about 20 graduate students have had a chance to work at the reservoir for a term, he said, but funding for the research is due to run out in 1980.

Iranians

shah would be allowed to enter the United States, but the State Department has contended that it was assured that the Iranian government would protect the legation.

The president said it was "a clear tenet" of international affairs that a host government "is responsible for the safety and well being of diplomatic representatives."

Carter's speech came a day after he moved to freeze all assets of the Iranian government in the United States. Earlier, he ordered an end to all U.S. imports of Iranian oil.

He told the labor leaders: "These developments in Iran have made it starkly clear that our excessive dependence on foreign oil is a direct physical threat to our freedom and security as Americans."

Earlier, at the State Department, spokesperson Hodding Carter said the United States is putting no pressure on the shah to leave the country.

"WE HAVEN'T GONE to him and said 'get out,'" the spokesperson said. He said the deposed monarch is free to stay in the United States "until he and his doctors decide he doesn't need to."

There have been reports that the shah may be able to leave the hospital within two weeks and that he will return to Mexico where he has been living since he was overthrown last winter.

When Carter announced his plans to freeze Iranian assets, Treasury Department officials indicated there could be further economic moves against the Iranians. Among the possible actions suggested have been an embargo on shipment of U.S. food to Iran.

But State Department spokesperson Carter said Thursday there are "no plans to use food as an instrument" against Iran "right now."

And Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland, attending a United Nations conference in Rome, said a cutoff of food shipments would be "more interesting than important."

BERGLAND SAID SUCH an embargo would be difficult to enforce since Iran could buy U.S. food through third countries and noted that the Iranians are now buying relatively little U.S. grain and other produce.

Still, there was support for such an embargo from the American Farm Bureau Federation, an organization that usually opposes the use of farm produce as a foreign policy tool.

Meanwhile, the students holding the embassy in Tehran denied a report that they would release some of their hostages, including all of the women. They declared that only the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran's revolutionary leader, and the Iranian people can tell them what to do with the hostages.

Iran's foreign affairs minister, Abolhassan Bani Sadr, had said in a television interview that "all women and blacks would be freed very soon." Earlier, Bani Sadr had told a news conference that those without a "connection with the United States" might be freed by the weekend.

Bill allowing meditation in schools passes House

By MICKI MAYNARD
United Press International

On a vote called "an indication of the mood of our times," the House Thursday passed a measure directing public schools to set aside time for voluntary prayer and meditation.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Ethel Terrell, D-Highland Park, was approved on a 61-28 vote. It now goes to the Senate.

"This is an indication of the mood of our times," Terrell said. "During these perilous days confronting us, prayer can be very strengthening and can pull together people."

Under the measure, school districts must set aside a period outside regularly scheduled classes for prayer or meditation. The length and time of the devotion period is left to the discretion of the school.

Terrell, a first-year lawmaker, saw her first bill approved with no debate. Action came after a series of routine votes on minor bills, and caught many lawmakers off guard.

THE LOWER CHAMBER spent several hours debating the measure earlier this week. Supporters of voluntary prayer beat back several amendments which would have made the prayer or meditation silent.

Debate over allowing prayer in public schools has been an issue for more than 17 years since a controversial 1962 U.S. Supreme Court ruling which barred mandatory devotions.

In other action, the House voted to delay the state's takeover of county probation offices.

Lawmakers last winter approved the takeover in an $8.7 million appropriations bill. The bill included funds to assume financially-crumbling Wayne County's probation system.

Gov. William G. Milliken later vetoed the measure as part of his pledge not to approve funds for Wayne County until a reorganization plan was enacted.

CLONES ARE CHEAP!

At Copygraph we've perfected the art of cloning. Our copies are more than copies. They are as close to exact duplicates of the original as possible.

Our new Kodak Ektaprint is the most advanced copier available anywhere. Which means that not only are our clones exceptionally perfect, they're exceptionally inexpensive.

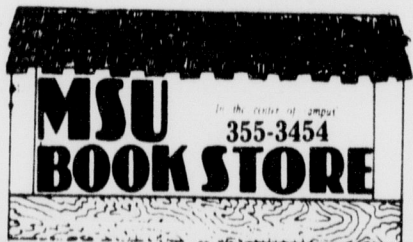

So that every resume looks as good as the original. And every page of your thesis is crisp and clear.
