PUBLICATION GUIDELINES:

We ask contributors to submit two (2) typed copies, following the format (on such issues as references and notes) of articles in this issue of TRANSFORMATION. Whilst the journal will cater for work at any level of abstraction, or detail, a number of criteria will guide the editors in selection of material for inclusion. Articles should aim for academic rigour but also clarify the political implications of the issues discussed. We are concerned not to compete with other South African journals that may cover related ground but in different ways – this will govern our selection principles. All articles will be assessed anonymously by the referees. Contributions should preferably not exceed the following lengths:

Analytical articles: 8 000 words

Debates, comment and review articles: 3 000 words

Also see inside back cover 'Notes for Contributors'.

The views expressed in TRANSFORMATION do not necessarily reflect those of the editors.

Articles

- Crime, police and public in transitional societies 1
Mark Shaw considers the nature of crime in societies in transition, and focuses on the causal factors for increased levels of crime during periods of political, economic and social change. He argues that evidence that the fight against crime in transitional societies is being won is far from conclusive, and a series of policy dilemmas that confront such societies are presented.
- Microscopic and macroscopic responses to inequalities in the governance of security: respective experiments in South Africa and Northern Ireland 25
Michael Kempa and Clifford Shearing (in collaboration with John Cartwright and Madeleine Jenneker) examine the multiple 'nodes' of policing in the global era. Through focusing upon the illustrative examples of South Africa and Northern Ireland, a range of normative concerns that are associated with the proliferation of non-state policing and disorder intolerant public policing are identified, and two adaptive policy responses to these concerns are explored.
- Performance measures for the South African Police Service: setting the benchmarks for service delivery 55
Ted Leggett looks at international experience and argues that there is a need to return to a set of performance measures that align with what the police actually do, and makes several suggestions for indicators that do not create perverse incentives.

A failure of rural protection

Bronwen Manby examines violent crime on the South African farm as well as government responses to this type of crime, in the shape of the 'rural protection plan'. She argues that while there are deficiencies in the response to violent crime against farm owners, the system has tended to favour protection of farm owners over other farm residents
